

8. Meeting on 09.25.2010

Opening Remarks by Nicolai Viktorovich Levashov

Good afternoon to everyone who came today. I will try to answer as many questions as possible. First of all, I will prioritize answering questions from the audience. Some questions have already been submitted by those who couldn't attend. As usual, I'll start with an update on how things are going with the books — a sort of informational overview.

As of today, the total number of book downloads this year is 560,802, and since downloads began — 1,802,273. As you can see, the number of downloads continues to be significant. In September — slightly less, although September is not over yet. Nevertheless, the number never drops below 55–60 thousand downloads per month.

The leader in downloads remains ".....", followed by "The Final Appeal." All other books are also being downloaded quite significantly, which shows that this isn't just something made up. These are monthly statistics, and they're also tracked by year. So, for anyone wondering where these figures come from — this is how many books are downloaded from my website and from the "Sovetnik" website, managed by Dmitry Bayda. These are the only two sites for which we have data. There are other websites that also host my books extensively, but they don't provide download statistics. So, these numbers reflect only the minimum known quantity. How many people have actually downloaded, copied, and shared them — that can only be estimated.

Now, I received a rather amusing message on my website: "You... please stop composting young people's brains, I ask you kindly — God sees everything and will punish you; retribution awaits you." Amusing, right? I could comment on that. If God truly saw everything, then He would have already punished so many people who commit murder, robbery, rape... But for some reason, He punishes no one.

What does that suggest? That if He really existed, He would not allow the abomination that has been happening on Earth for the past 1,000 years, for example. And if He doesn't punish, then there are two possibilities: either He doesn't exist at all, or the one whom people call "God" is in fact the very one orchestrating all of this. In that case, He more closely resembles His opposite. And you know how they address the Almighty in morning church prayers? "The Light-Bringer." Are you aware that "Light-Bringer" in Latin is Lucifer? So, every morning, the priest is praying to Lucifer.

But the most amusing thing was another letter I received, where a man wrote that one of his acquaintances came to work and started talking about his experience during clinical death — most likely he was in a coma for a long time. And he tells how, during that time, he was brought back and told it wasn't his time to leave. He thought it was God. He was slightly mistaken there.

And the funniest part: he said he saw Lenin there, and all the priests — they were all in hell. So, all the liars of the Orthodox Church will be burning in hell. And essentially, yes — if you consider what priests do, what they preach, how they deceive people by hiding behind someone who doesn't even exist, using people's ignorance, then naturally, they're not going to end up on a high level — they'll end up on the lowest one.

So, the man simply gave his interpretation of his experience. A rather amusing interpretation — that all the priests of the Orthodox Church will burn in hell. But this doesn't apply only to the Orthodox Church. This applies to priests and clergy of all existing churches, because they are engaged in the most shameless deception. And it's not just priests who are engaged in nonsense...

I received another letter. The person — I won't name names, because this individual is seeking understanding — writes: "Hello, Nicolai Viktorovich! The Center for Cosmic Development..." Yes, such a center exists. A very "knowledgeable" one, as you'll soon understand.

"In your books, there is confusion in the history between the dimensions of our virtual Earth and the real Earth. The Vedas do not refer to our Earth, but to an Earth on a higher level."

Well, imagine that! The guy must've read the Vedas very thoroughly.

"So many events don't actually pertain to the history of our Earth. The Moon Fatta existed at a higher level, and in our world, it was Lelia. I'll send you the answer I got from the Center for Cosmic Development."

So here we have a person who doesn't understand anything trying to ask questions to people who understand even less. And they... well, I'll just read their response. When I read the answer from this Center for Cosmic Development, I had an evening of comedy — like watching a show of clever and funny people.

"Another question for you regarding Phaethon. On the higher level it's clear — there lived dragons and some kind of population. But in our dimension, what was on it? According to my data, it was a star that exploded and formed a supernova. From my information, Phaethon was a supernova, the last dying star that has an orbital period of 3,600 years." This person has total chaos in his head. Now let's read further — the answer from the Center for Cosmic Development, and this is the pinnacle:

“Our history on the virtual Earth in our cycle...” (Very informative, right? – NVL’s commentary.) “...that which was on the upper Earth (and what is the lower one? Where is upper, where is lower?) For us, it’s cosmic history, and it’s very long — several cycles. This history is only interesting in the sense that it correlates with ours. Other details concerning life on that Earth are partially given to us in fairy tales, legends, and facts. There are many of them, and there’s no point digging them up separately. This information is found in the interfield of the next level, accessible only to specialists (probably them). As for Phaethon in our world — during the creation of our universe, Phaethon of the next higher universe already no longer existed, only a belt of fragments remained — and we see a copy of this belt in our universe.” (A copy! When an asteroid flies by, don’t worry — it’s just a copy. No need to panic — it’s a phantom from Phaethon.)

When you read it, it’s clear the guy still doesn’t understand a lot. But when you read the “experts” response, it’s just astonishing how ignorant people can be — and these are people who consider themselves specialists and claim to represent a “Center for Cosmic Development.” What kind of cosmic development can we even talk about with such answers?

Those of the older generation — we all studied astronomy in school, where it was clearly shown that all asteroids, the asteroid belt... Well, not the “asteroid belt,” actually — that’s already an error. The asteroid belt exists around Saturn and Titan; that’s where a belt truly exists. But what they call “asteroids flying around” — people are completely ignorant, because they’ve confused everything that can and can’t be confused.

The thing is, when it comes to Phaethon, it wasn’t in some other reality. It happened in our own reality, not in another universe, but in ours. The fact that other universes exist doesn’t mean asteroids fall from them into ours.

Every word from that “specialist” at the Center for Cosmic Development could be taken apart and explained for half an hour just to reveal the depth of their ignorance. The existence of asteroids is common knowledge. When their orbits were studied, it was discovered that they all intersect at one point — and that point lies on the orbit between Mars and Jupiter. In other words, right where a planet should have once been. The fact that the orbits of many asteroids intersect at a single point tells us there was once an explosion, as a result of which the planet broke into pieces. And those fragments are still flying along their respective orbits today. But they all intersect at the original point of destruction.

This basic astronomical fact is somehow unknown to the “Center for Cosmic Development.” They’ve probably gone so far into space that they can’t find their way back. After any explosion, fragments will always scatter in all directions. And such an explosion happened — not in some alternate reality, but in our reality. And Phaethon has nothing to do with “Planet X,” which people immediately confuse with Nibiru and so on.

Planet X really did exist, and our solar system used to be a binary system — it had a second star. About six billion years ago, this second star exploded, becoming a supernova. It ejected all of its mass and formed a small neutron star about 3,600 kilometers in diameter, which began rotating with an orbital period of 3,600 years.

It left the plane of the solar system and started orbiting like this (makes a vertical oval motion), completing a full orbit every 3,600 years. And every 3,600 years, it would re-enter the boundaries of the Solar System, and depending on the point of entry and which planet it approached, it would cause various cataclysms. But it is not a planet — it is a neutron star. A small neutron star, 3,600 km in diameter, with a mass greater than the Sun's — such small stars do exist. Naturally, no civilization can exist on it, and none ever did. No civilizations ever existed on Nibiru, and they never could have.

There's a whole system of publications on the internet — people are being deceived. Some are misled out of ignorance, and others deliberately deceive. The ignorance stems from the fact that very often when people "breakthrough" (mentally or spiritually) and begin to receive telepathic contact — which is quite real — they always assume that if they're receiving information telepathically, it must be from God or other civilizations (depending on their beliefs). And they start receiving information from "there," but because they don't understand how it works, they often become victims of a joke. For those interested, I give several amusing examples in my autobiography.

People genuinely don't realize that the information they're receiving is occurring at the level of their own understanding. The level of response from the Center for Cosmic Development clearly shows that even basic astrophysics and physics are beyond them — and the information they "receive" corresponds exactly to what they already know. So, you can immediately tell whether someone is receiving true information or just getting it from their own subconscious.

A person who is in contact (with some external source) asks a question, and from them information is drawn and fed back according to what they are ready for. And they begin to perceive this information as truth. I honestly feel sorry for such people, because most of them truly have abilities that could be properly developed, and they could achieve a lot. But because they fall into the traps of various types and levels of parasites, their potential is burned up for nothing — someone else uses it. That is truly a shame.

The saddest part is that many of them don't want to let go of their illusions. For them, it can be quite a shock when they've lived in this illusion, and then it turns out it was all one big lie, and they were being deceived. I've had cases where I had to deal with such phenomena, and afterward, some people even went into depression because they felt they were uniquely chosen.

And you know what always happens with the "chosen ones." And when it turns out not to be true — when the illusion shatters — instead of feeling happy that they've been freed from parasites and can now move forward and do truly meaningful, real things... they don't want that. They prefer it when someone keeps whispering to them that they were specially chosen.

Unfortunately, this happens very often. You say that you are bringing true information? By all means — who's against it? There can be a lot of different information. Please, come — we'll see where the information is really coming from. Strangely, no one ever comes. Because they are afraid. And this isn't just talk — it's a fact.

I've told several people: let me help you figure it out — whether what you're experiencing is real or if you're being misled. Not a single one of those I offered this to — through intermediaries — agreed. They prefer this kind of self-deception. Everyone is free to lose their mind in their own way; if that's what they like, let them go ahead.

But the problem is that these people are messing with other people's heads. They spread utter nonsense — there's no other word for it — and people who don't know or understand trust them. And the most astonishing thing is that the more ignorant the person who's preaching, the more brazenly they do it, absolutely convinced that they are conveying the ultimate truth.

That's what I've had to deal with. It's simply astonishing how not only blind people can be, but how truly harmful they are. They think that if someone speaks confidently and forcefully, it must mean they actually know something. But in most cases, it is self-deception — or deliberate deception, when the person is knowingly doing it.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

8.1. QUESTION: Nicolai Viktorovich, tell us about Sakharov, you promised.

ANSWER: First of all — to whom did I promise? And secondly, as they say, I can't say anything good about the deceased, and I don't feel like saying bad things either. Because I really can't say anything good about him. I'll say a few words, since the question was raised.

In my view, this person was a true provocateur. I happened to meet people who worked in the defense sector. And those people — they were removed, eliminated. I knew a family where the husband was an academic who worked on creating a missile shield against Israel at the time. I was acquainted with his widow back in Soviet times. She told me how he was sent to a resort for rest, was given an injection, and a tiny air bubble got into his bloodstream. Do I need to explain further? He fell into a coma and never came out of it.

I can say that this wasn't the only case like that — there were many others. People who worked in the Soviet defense industry lived like in a prison. They were in closed cities, not allowed to leave. If they were allowed out, it was under false names. Their names and documents were constantly changed. That is, they had a real name, but almost no one knew their real identity.

That same Sakharov received the title of academician and Hero of Socialist Labor under closed, classified conditions. He was awarded all of this, and no one knew about it except for a handful of people. And then suddenly this man starts saying he supports democracy, that he's against this and that, against nuclear weapons. Yet he participated in the development of the hydrogen bomb.

Now, the question of who he was as a scientist — that's another matter entirely. But when a person creates a hydrogen bomb, does he not understand what he's creating? Of course he does. Even you — if you were engaged in such work, you'd understand that the hydrogen bomb is made for one thing: the destruction of millions of people. You don't have to be an academician to understand that. He received the academician title and the Hero of Socialist Labor award for creating the hydrogen bomb.

If he was so noble, and suddenly realized the moral implications at some point in his life, then the first thing he should have done was to renounce the title of Hero of Socialist Labor and return his academician status. But for some reason, he didn't do that. Instead, he started talking about democracy.

Unfortunately, he was a planted figure. When he was allowed to speak out, it was because someone found it beneficial. His public position was used to draw attention to himself — and to identify dissidentminded people within the Soviet Union. After all, thoughts were hard to read, and in the Soviet Union, very few had the skills to do so.

And most people who began to think independently came to quite unexpected conclusions for themselves. But you can't imprison someone just for their thoughts — you can't sentence someone to 15 years simply because their thoughts are “wrong.” So how do you identify such people?

That's why they came up with figures like Solzhenitsyn and Sakharov — as a kind of litmus test, to detect among the population those who were truly beginning to awaken and think critically. Those who were pained in their soul, who suffered from what was happening in the country. And yet, these very people were being sent away by the dozens for 15 years — to the appropriate places at that time.

But neither Sakharov nor Solzhenitsyn was ever touched — not even with a finger. Did you know that Solzhenitsyn was flown to France? He first arrived in France on a private plane, and was handed over personally by a KGB colonel. Did you know that? You'll find that out, along with much more.

And what's more, many of the ideas that Sakharov implemented were stolen. They weren't his own. They were the ideas of prisoners whom he oversaw in a special camp — a concentration camp. But that's another story altogether.

8.2. QUESTION: A purely personal question regarding ancestral curses. Someone is asking for a recommendation about this issue.

ANSWER: I can't recommend anyone, because if I recommend someone, that means I guarantee that person is capable of handling it. I don't really know anyone like that right now, mainly because I have very limited interaction with healers for various reasons. Whoever wrote this note, at the end of the meeting, think clearly about what you are asking in regard to ancestral curses — we'll try to remove it during the session.

8.3. QUESTION: Do you have any plans to adapt your works for the understanding of 7th–8th grade students, at least?

ANSWER: Adapting information for children; that is a good question. But why adapt it? Even back when I was in America, one teacher was teaching Inhomogeneous Universe to his school students — in an extracurricular setting, of course. And he later wrote letters saying the kids were grasping it easily and freely. So, there's no need to adapt anything. You just shouldn't stuff children's heads with nonsense at first, only to later break that down and rebuild something new. If you give children the right information from the beginning, they actually perceive it very easily and naturally. But when something is hammered into their heads without proof, as dogma, then yes — it becomes very difficult to remove later. So, there's really no need to adapt.

8.4. QUESTION: Herbalist-healers who are Orthodox Christians claim that one of the major factors contributing to healing is sincere repentance from the awareness of one's sins: fornication, abortion, gluttony. They have many convincing examples of true healing occurring this way.

ANSWER: That may be a necessary condition in their view, but it is by no means a sufficient one. Could you answer what the power is, from your point of view, in such deep recognition of one's wrongdoings?

Why do people undergo transformation through this? Isn't it precisely because many people in our country become Orthodox Christians due to the fact that the system of Orthodox fasting and veneration of Russian saints is based on Vedic roots and Vedic knowledge, which Christian preachers have appropriated?

In fact, you already give the answer in your own question. A major fraud was committed by Patriarch Nikon between 1653–1656 if we translate that to our calendar. How? Because Christianity was always called True-Faith Christianity before him. Even Pushkin wrote in his poems: "a true-faith Christian." And in the West, they call it the Russian Orthodox Church.

Nikon committed, in my view, a major deception. In the 17th century, people went to church more for formality, because they lived by traditions that had existed for thousands of years. All the Vedic holidays were still celebrated just as they had been before Christianity appeared in Rus. And that had continued for 6–7 centuries, and the Church had not been able to do anything about it. So, Nikon made a very clever and, from my point of view, vile move: he deceived both the genetic memory and the folk memory of the people. By the 17th century, there were virtually no literate people among the common population.

Back in the 10th century, even people in remote villages were literate. Russia, or Kievan Rus - which was also called the Edge Rus, hence the term "Ukraine" later on, meaning "Edge of Rus" had a literate population. People could read, write, and do arithmetic. By the 17th century, almost all common people were illiterate, except for the nobility and clergy. The people could not read themselves; they only knew what someone read to them or passed on by word of mouth. So, they followed traditions as their fathers and grandfathers had lived, celebrating those Vedic holidays by inherited custom.

What did Nikon do? Seeing that Christianity was not taking root in Rus, he decided to outsmart everyone by using genetic memory, and he did the following. The Christian Church is full of saints—there's a saint for every day—so he matched Christian saints to the days of Vedic holidays and declared them Christian holidays, reinterpreted through the lens of Christianity. And people (after a hundred years had passed, with no literacy) forgot that those holidays had nothing to do with Christianity.

They continued to attend these holidays, on Easter, for example, they still knock eggs against each other. Children in Russia still do this. By the way, this tradition exists in Russia, but in the Catholic and Protestant churches, there is no such custom.

I remember from childhood, if you crack someone else's egg, you get to take it. But do you know where this holiday comes from? This holiday is over 118,000 years old. It symbolizes the victory of the god Tarkh over the dark forces when he destroyed Lelia by blowing her up along with the strongholds of the Koschei. Since then, this holiday has marked the victory over the dark forces. The cracked egg symbolizes the shattered moon, Lelia.

Everyone does this, yet no one remembers why. Here's a confirmation of how Vedic holidays were transformed into Christian ones. And people, children, still dye eggs on Easter, they run around, knock them together, and celebrate when they win. And not a single priest has ever explained why this is done.

Now, regarding the question about repentance. Without a doubt, repentance is a good thing. If a person realizes that they have done something wrong, that's good. But nothing changes from that alone. If someone becomes aware of their bad actions, we can assume they won't do similar things in the future, and that's already a plus. But what's been done doesn't disappear.

As for what herbalist-healers say, such claims are either made out of ignorance, or from a desire to avoid being targeted by the Church. People go to church, they pray — has prayer ever really saved anyone's life? No one's. Those famous religious processions, and people supposedly getting healed, some walking without crutches after using them, what's going on?

The truth is, in a trance state, a person may genuinely feel better for a short time. But no one notices that every year it's the same people throwing away their crutches, each time "liberated" again. What's really happening is that, after absorbing the energy of the crowd during the trance state, some people temporarily feel better, but then everything returns to normal. And the Church cleverly uses this to deceive people.

About the Holy Fire. How does the non-burning fire appear in Jerusalem? There was one real incident that no one talks about. The procession takes place on a specific day, for some reason, this phenomenon occurs only on one day. If it happened every day, then I would say, "It's a miracle of God" — but even then, it would still be questionable.

There are many young boys present during the event, and one time an order was given: "Don't let the boys in." And when the boys weren't allowed in, no fire ignited at all. It's simply that children have a high energy potential, and it is their potential that makes the ignition of the non-burning fire possible. No children — nothing happens. When people realized what was going on, they stopped keeping the children away, and once again, the fire appeared. So, are children our Almighty God? That's what it looks like — if nothing happens without them. But that's absurd.

About herbal healers, herbs, and water. Back in the Soviet Union, there was a famous herbalist named Popov, who lived in Kyiv. He was famous throughout the entire Union because his remedies worked. What was really going on? He would gather herbs at the right time, and his wife would sit and prepare the mixtures according to his recipes. It was a family secret — he never let anyone else in on it. It was a family business. After some time, his wife died. And in order to keep the secret from falling into the wrong hands, he had to start preparing the recipes and tinctures himself. But once he began doing everything himself, nothing worked anymore.

So, what was really working? It was his wife. When she was preparing the mixtures, she would tune into what the treatment was for — let's say, for example, the lungs — and she would channel her potential into it. If the herbs alone had worked, then they would have continued working. The herbs were simply carriers, catalysts, that enhanced effectiveness only in the presence of her energy.

Later, I was told that their daughter grew up and started doing the same thing, and once again everything started working. Many people don't understand what's really happening and why herbs need to be used. In fact, herbs are used as an auxiliary element. For example, if you need to flush out toxins — they help remove them.

But in reality, you can take ordinary water, treat it properly, and it will do everything necessary without any herbs at all, and even more — if you understand what and how to do it. And these aren't just words, they are facts. When people talk that way (praising herbs only), from my point of view, they are either misinformed or dishonest. They are just trying to avoid having some priest call them the "antichrist," because then the believers would stop coming to them for herbal treatments. That's all there is to it.

8.5. QUESTION: Is it possible for the effects of your sessions, which take place after meetings with readers, to affect people who are not currently in the room—through someone who is present? And what needs to be done for that?

ANSWER: In principle, yes, it is possible. A person can watch a recording; the effect will be the same. Maybe not as effective, because I try to take into account the specific characteristics of those who are sitting in the room. But for the one who asked the question, if you simply think about the person you're referring to, that will be enough. Just think of them, and that's it.

8.6. QUESTION: They ask: with artificial insemination, are there no feelings involved?

ANSWER: During conception, there is still a surge. In The Final Appeal to Mankind, I specifically described all the nuances that influence this process, the foundation of it is the energy surge. Feelings can add a plus or minus to what that surge creates during the fusion of two cells. So, what's important here is that with artificial insemination, naturally, children with high talent levels will not be born, the essence (or soul) drawn in will be of a lower level.

However, if a child is conceived during heavy alcohol consumption, the essence will be even lower. It all depends on the conditions: in some cases, it can be normal; in others, it can cause harm. But in any case, if there is an opportunity, conception should happen naturally because the energy released by the parents during that act is very important for attracting a higher-level essence.

Someone recently told me an amusing story. Do you remember, back in the Soviet Union, how people mocked the person who supposedly said: "There is no sex in the Soviet Union?" But in reality, it's a great example of how things can be manipulated, how everything imaginable and unimaginable can be distorted.

The person actually said something quite different: "There is no sex in the Soviet Union—there is love in the Soviet Union." And that's a very big difference. Indeed, in my view, sex has nothing in common with love. Love is pure, beautiful. Sex — it's dirty. That's why the true essence should be spiritual kinship between people — that must be the dominant foundation. But you see, they edited it down and left only: "There is no sex in the Soviet Union!" That's how easily consciousness can be manipulated.

Now, you say, at the moment of conception... There was a letter... someone asked, "How is it possible that conception happens a week later, that the fusion of cells occurs later..." I don't know where the person got such information, because an egg cell lives only one day. A sperm cell lives even less—and dies quickly. After the egg is released from the ovary, it must travel through the fallopian tubes to reach the uterus where fertilization can take place; otherwise, problems can occur. And even that takes time. So, when someone says that fertilization occurs two weeks later, I've read this too, and I was quite surprised. In any case, sperm dies very quickly. Why? Because sperm exists in an alkaline environment, while a woman's body maintains a highly acidic environment. That's why infertility often occurs even between perfectly healthy men and women. If a woman's vaginal environment is too acidic, it can kill all sperm before they ever reach the egg.

On one hand, this is nature's way of ensuring that only the strongest, healthiest sperm reach the egg. But on the other hand, if it's too extreme, none survive. So, when you read things like "conception happens after two weeks," you can't help but think — why not just open a basic textbook on human anatomy and physiology and read the elementary facts before asking such questions?

8.7. QUESTION: They ask about particle interference and how it happens.

ANSWER: A purely physical question, I don't think many will be interested. Why does it manifest itself - as wave interference, because wave processes occur. What is a wave? It is a microscopic oscillation of the dimensionality of space, and it arises as a result of these oscillations. For those who read "The Inhomogeneous Universe," I explained the question there. Did everyone study chemistry at school? Exothermic, endothermic reactions, chemical reactions that occur with the absorption or release of heat.

What is heat? It is infrared radiation - these are thermal waves of a certain length. In one case with absorption, in the other case with radiation. Why does this happen? Because a wave is a microscopic oscillation of space at the atomic level, the microworld. Due to the fact that each atom has its own level of dimensionality, its own position, one atom is in one place (the nucleus), and the other nucleus is below. And their electron shells are like orbits around the nucleus, and it turns out that they cannot merge, because they are at different levels, either higher or lower. In those cases when absorption occurs, when one atom, which is lower, its wave is raised by the heat, there is a coordination and a clash, and at the moment of connection and the connection of electron shells occurs - a new molecule appears. In this case (if below) there is absorption, this wave is absorbed, a quantum, because there is no quantum wave.

And if it is located higher, the wave went up and down, and during the movement it reached the level once, the docking occurred, a new molecule arose, and here it is emitted. That is why the chemical reaction was called so, without understanding, and they never gave an explanation why exactly. And here is a very simple explanation, because the nuclei, they differ not only in their weight, but also how the weight affects the surrounding space. For some reason, everyone forgot about this. Read "The Inhomogeneous Universe," everything is described there in detail. The same thing, all these particles are connected with microscopic vibrations of space, and during interaction the wave nature appears, that's all.

8.8 QUESTION: Tell us more about the mechanism of evolution. Why are there no transitional forms?

ANSWER: Because if we talk about humans, homo sapiens or Cro-Magnon, some people also asked the question: "They write that Cro-Magnons appeared about 40 thousand years ago." So, Cro-Magnons are homo sapiens. Homo sapiens is the Latin name, and Cro-Magnon is the place where the remains of a humanoid of our type were first found in France, in the Cro-Magnon province, that's why they called it that. You see, people get confused, they think that Cro-Magnons are another species. There can't be transitional forms between humans and humanoid creatures because they didn't exist. Because all living people, not only whites, of all races, they didn't originate on our Earth, they were brought here. The white race came first and colonized this Earth, and then accepted refugees from other planets who participated in the Star Wars, and three other races appeared about 40 thousand years ago. They just keep quiet about the fact that data was on the territory of Russia.

The Tisul find, a burial site discovered in Siberia, estimated to be 100,000 years old, where the remains were preserved as if the person had died yesterday. Why is it being hushed up? Because if this were acknowledged, it would require a complete revision of everything. And even back in Soviet times, many found that inconvenient, just as they do today.

If this were accepted as true, it would turn out that humans did not originate in Africa and never appeared in Africa in the first place. At that point, political implications come into play, because suppressing information is a very effective strategy. If people don't know something, they assume everything is just fine.

Back in Soviet times, I knew Vladimir Sergeev, who at one point worked in the press center of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs under Shchelokov. He told me that in the Soviet Union, people walked the streets calmly and fearlessly. He said: "If we had reported in the mass media what was actually going on, not a single person would have gone outside."

The same kinds of things that happen today were going on back then — maniacs, rapists roaming around Moscow, but the media kept silent. People knew nothing and walked peacefully around Moscow and other cities. Suppressing information has a huge effect on people, both positively and negatively. That's why many facts are deliberately withheld.

As for evolutionary transitional forms, they cannot exist because humans did not originate on this planet. There are many indicators of this. In Africa, in hot equatorial and sub-equatorial regions, there are human-like apes — gorillas and chimpanzees. But take a look: in that intense heat, neither gorillas nor chimpanzees have lost their fur. Why do they need so much hair in that kind of climate? Now, look at humans. Are you all covered in hair? Sure, there are some vestigial remnants, a light layer of hair, but it's very minor and insignificant.

What does this suggest? That humans once had fur, but even people living in the far north have not grown it back, despite living in extreme cold for many generations. Their ancestors have lived there for 40,000, even 100,000 years, and still no fur. Wouldn't it have been helpful? What does that tell us? That the evolution of our species didn't occur here. And then there's the issue of fingers. Humans still have slight webbing between them, which is absent in human-like apes.

In all mammals on Earth, the male reproductive organ contains a cartilaginous structure, a bone (called a baculum or os penis), that ensures an erection whenever appropriate mating conditions arise (e.g., estrus in females). But in humans, the male organ lacks any such cartilaginous support. There is no baculum, not in humans, not even in apes like gorillas, chimpanzees, or orangutans.

What does this suggest? Clearly, we are not from here. And there are many other such facts pointing in that direction. I read an article (also kept hidden from the public) in which a female biologist studying anthropoid apes discovered a crucial difference, one that strongly indicates humans could not have evolved from apes under any circumstances. There are dozens of facts like this, each one 100% proving that we are not native to this planet.

Yes, our ancestors lived here for quite a while, some lineages go back 40,000 years, others 600,000 to 800,000 years, though precise data is lacking. Nonetheless, we are not the original inhabitants of this planet, and that means no transitional forms could have existed. And as for the other hominid species that did exist—they went extinct long before modern humans appeared, so they could not have been transitional forms between apes and us.

8.9. QUESTION: What is located in the area of Mount Kailash?

ANSWER: I don't know what that mountain is. If you find more information about it and send it to my website, then I can study it and give an answer. I can't speak in such abstract terms.

8.10. QUESTION: In the USA, Germany, Ukraine, and Russia, there are mediums who channel the messenger Kryon, referred to as an angel of the Earth's magnetic service. Schools have been established, meetings and seminars are held, and many books by Kryon's messenger are being published. Who is he really? Does he belong to the world of light? The messenger says that Earth has already transitioned into the fourth dimension, and that all people, whether awakened or not, will undergo ascension in 2012. What is your opinion on this information?

ANSWER: What is the fourth dimension? In physics, the fourth dimension is considered to be time, although time is a conventional unit—it doesn't actually exist in nature. There are reversible and irreversible processes, but the unit of time was invented. A machine moves at a certain speed—we can measure and control it. But does that mean speed exists independently? Can you take speed itself and ride it like a car? No, because speed is measured in units that humans invented. It's simply a convenient convention. The same applies to time. There are periodic and non-periodic processes, reversible and irreversible. But time as such, as a tangible unit existing in nature, does not exist. It was invented by humans.

Our ancestors had 16 hours in a day, 40 days in a month originally, and an hour was different from what it is now. It was changed—so what? Did anything fundamentally change? No. It's a conditional unit, because a person is born and dies. To clarify, the age of a person's cells, even for someone who is 200 years old, never exceeds 15 years. That's the cycle of cell renewal. Old cells are replaced by new ones, and the oldest ones are bone cells. Others, like most tissues, are renewed every 5–6 years, and red blood cells, erythrocytes, every 90 days. So, at any age, a person's cellular age does not exceed 15 years.

So, why does a person age? It's not about time, there are other processes that occur, which lead to cells no longer functioning as they did when a boy was 15, or in a 90-year-old man. Even though the cells are the same age. These are irreversible processes, and regardless of the cellular age, a person still dies. Time is just a convenient, conditional unit, and when physicists introduced the concept, they later forgot that it was symbolic.

The same goes for the concept of energy. In physics, there was once a school of thought called energism. But energy is simply a parameter of matter's transformation. Matter changes from one form to another, and that transition is measured by a greater or lesser potential, more or less energy. It's a conditional unit. But they separated it—energy on its own, matter on its own. That's absurd. The same is true here: you shouldn't get too caught up in abstract quantities. That's how science has led the entire planet to the brink of ecological catastrophe.

8.11. QUESTION: Do you think armed conflicts are possible in Iran? If so, what are the consequences for Russia?

ANSWER: As you know, the U.S. failed in its attempt to start World War III with the Islamic world when it attacked Iraq. The U.S. invaded in 2004, hoping it would provoke a reaction from the Arab world and trigger a third world war. A third world war is needed to pull them out of a crisis. But they failed — it didn't happen. And not because they weren't trying or didn't put in the work; they did, very thoroughly.

They were behind World War I, behind World War II, and the American financial mafia was also behind the Russian Revolution. They are behind this again now, because this parasitic system cannot exist without war. Only through war can they drain others' blood and continue to thrive. In 2000, they failed to launch World War III, and the crisis had already started by then.

And now America is practically bankrupt. Things are getting worse and worse for them. That's why they desperately need a war. In 2008, they tried to start World War III by drawing Russia directly into it. It didn't work. When the attempt to ignite a world war through the South Ossetian conflict failed, what did they do next? They tried to shift the focus to Iran. Even an American fleet entered the Black Sea. Turkey delayed their entry for a long time, but eventually they got in, planning to start something, but it didn't work. And it won't work.

Right now, they very much want a war — ideally a world war — because it's the only way they can continue to loot other countries and maintain their prosperity. But I believe that this will not happen.

8.12. QUESTION: Can people of the Great Race incarnate in other nations or races, and is this reflected in genetics?

ANSWER: It will not be reflected in genetics in any way. But the essence enters into resonance with genetics, and if people of the Great Race drink, ruin themselves, that is, they ruin the essence, then after they leave their body, God grant that they climb into a body with the genetics of, say, a black person. Because they are ruining themselves, their evolutionary level declines, and an essence always incarnates into genetics that match its level. Therefore, if the level of the essence is very low, it will not be able to enter into high-level genetics. The white race is neither better, nor worse — it's simply older because its evolutionary process has been going on for much longer.

Read the second volume, it is explained in more detail there. The white race is neither better, nor worse, but simply a more evolutionarily mature race, which has lived on other planets much longer than all the others. The black, yellow and red races are younger races - they have different evolutionary ages. I refer to this as an "evolutionary number."

A person of any race can evolutionarily enter the genetics with the evolutionary number that he has developed during his life. If a person drinks or uses drugs, then very often a situation arises where they can no longer enter a human incarnation and will hang around for a long time. In the best case, they may attach themselves to someone else as a parallel - a duplicate essence.

A split personality often occurs when, at the moment of conception, a higher-level essence enters, and the other one jumps in alongside it and coexists in the same body. These cases do happen. If you're concerned about making sure this doesn't happen — to ensure that your essence doesn't end up in much worse conditions in the future — my advice is: don't destroy yourself or your essence. If you follow that, nothing bad will happen.

8.13. QUESTION: about treatment.

ANSWER: For those who are interested, there are special healing sessions posted on the website — they help many people. I practiced healing for a very long time and achieved quite good results. But here's what I realized — I'll put it this way: "if a ship is sinking, treating someone's appendicitis is useless," because both the ship and the person who was cured will drown.

Right now, we are in a time where the priority is to save the ship. So, if I devote myself to healing, it will take up time, and I already spent quite a lot of time on that work. I still have to do it occasionally, but I don't plan to expand it further. Because all of this takes time, and even with the desire to help everyone, it's impossible.

And if I keep healing people, and everyone becomes healthy, but the ship sinks, or they all get wiped out, poisoned, or simply destroyed - then there will be no benefit from it. That is why I believe we must save the ship. We are trying to do just that — to save the ship. And then, once we have saved it, we can think about everything else.

And both – well, both things without bread rarely happen.

8.14. QUESTION: What is your opinion on the Israeli special forces attack on the GRU archive?

ANSWER: I wasn't aware of that incident. You know, they feel quite free on our territory, and that's unfortunate. If such an attack did happen, then I sympathize that it occurred, but the very fact of it speaks to a high level of arrogance, to the lawlessness they engage in.

8.15. QUESTION: Are the expressions "the heavenly forces will arrive" and "they will arrive on Vaitmanas" identical in meaning?

ANSWER: Yes, they correspond — it's the same thing. When you read the Vedas, "to arrive on Vaitmanas" means exactly "the heavenly forces will arrive." People were transported and carried on Vaitmanas and Vaitmaras.

8.16. QUESTION: Please give practical advice on how to protect children, at least mine, from illness (children under 3 years old).

ANSWER: First and foremost, don't vaccinate them if you want to protect them, because most vaccines destroy the already weakened immune system of children, they basically damage everything they can. Flu vaccines are useless, and here's an example of why. The flu virus mutates twice a year; it changes two times every year. But it takes four years to develop a flu vaccine. Need I say more? By the time the vaccine is developed, the virus has mutated eight times, and those vaccine preparations have no effect on it. So, what they inject into people and push onto them simply ruins their immune system. And often, with flu vaccines and others, they also inject pathogens that harm the person.

When someone gets sick, I don't recommend antibiotics. Don't lower the fever — with rare exceptions. Only about 1 in 100,000 people can't tolerate a high fever. In all other cases, the higher the child's temperature, the better. If the fever reaches 41°C (105.8°F), everything will be fine, the infection will die. The body protects itself this way. When body temperature rises above 39°C (102.2°F), nearly all disease-causing agents are destroyed. Only when the temperature approaches 41.5°C (106.7°F) is it necessary to reduce it, because at that point, real danger exists. But before that, don't lower the temperature — on the contrary, help the body fight.

And our ancestors were wise in this regard. When they got chilled to the bone, what did they do first? They went to the banya (traditional Russian steam bath). The body would get warmed so thoroughly there, intensely so, and all the nastiness was killed off. And people were healthy. Back then, every household had its own banya. Unfortunately, today, if someone goes to a banya, by the time they get back, after 2 hours, the benefit is pretty much gone.

But everything used to be so sensibly organized: a person gets chilled — and they immediately go to the banya, use birch branches (for steaming), rub on honey, all the toxins come out, and people were healthy, and almost no one got sick. There's even a joke that goes like this: "If you catch a cold or the flu and take medicine, you'll be sick for a week. If you don't take medicine, you'll be sick for 7 days."

So, if you want to protect children — first and foremost, keep them away from vaccinations. All of them! By the way, this information was hidden for a long time. The first vaccine was developed for smallpox. They took material from cows and then injected it into people. But when they started giving people smallpox vaccines, the number of deaths from smallpox increased. It didn't decrease — it went up.

Should we continue talking about the benefits of vaccinations? But now we have advanced much further. Now, those vaccines supposedly against this or that are inoculated with such deadly viruses that thoroughly ruin, and so many babies die. And from my point of view, small children should not be vaccinated at all, it is unacceptable. I can understand that if there was some kind of epidemic raging, it would make sense to get some kind of vaccination, maybe. And even then, this is with a healthy immune system. But if the immune system is weakened, then no vaccinations should be done at all! And how many children are born with a healthy immune system these days? Here is the answer to your question.

8.17. QUESTION: Nowadays, there are many different schools focused on the energetic development of a person... like Bronnikov's... What is your opinion about them?

ANSWER: Regarding Bronnikov, I haven't studied him in detail, but it was enough for me to have to help people who went through his school and later turned to him for help. He said, "That's not my responsibility." He works for a certain system that uses him. And people wrote to me, "Please help. We went there thinking it was something else, and then we were simply captured and used as a blind system." They asked for help, and I did help them.

At the very least, Bronnikov is doing things that he himself doesn't fully understand and works for the system that stands behind him. I don't think that system is a positive one. As for other schools of energetic development, I'm not familiar with what they're doing, so I won't speak about them, I'd need to look into it. But what I can say, based on facts I've encountered, is that there are people who have suffered from this.

8.18. QUESTION: Children, 7th-grade school students, have already become victims of the "golden calf" cult.

ANSWER: The mass media is imposing this on children. What young person doesn't want a cool car, a villa? They're being indoctrinated with the same mindset that was pushed in the USA. In the USA, everyone was turned into slaves. Now they're trying to do the same thing here. The "golden calf" cult — many of those who rushed to make money, once they made it, began to realize that it's not the most important thing, and started looking for something else.

Back in the 1990s, the country was just beginning to be carved up, but now the looting has mostly been completed. So, for the younger generation, if their parents don't belong to those who already managed to grab a piece of the pie, it's unlikely they'll be allowed to get a bite. But if you explain things to children properly, they're not stupid, they're just deceived and misled.

So many letters have come from young people aged 15, 16, 17, saying that after reading my book "Russia...", they finally found a meaning in life. You see, when a person isn't given the concept of "the meaning of life" from childhood, they end up chasing after "anything and everything." That includes the golden calf — they don't care about anything else as long as their pockets are full, their stomach is fed, and everything else that goes with that. That's why I believe we must work with children — and not just say, "You're stupid because you're stupid," but help them learn how to think.

The problem is that children aren't taught to think at all. They're really being mentally suppressed, especially by school programs. I recently spoke with a former classmate of mine, she teaches, and I asked her, "What are students like these days?" She said, "Kolya, you wouldn't believe how illiterate they are now. They come to universities and have to be taught things that should have been covered in school." Compared to our time, school has become so primitive. I was shocked by how much the school system has been ruined.

There wasn't much good in the Soviet Union, but the school system was the best in the world. And now we're being led toward an American-style school system — in other words, the worst in the world. In California, 50% of students who graduate high school can't even read their own diploma in English. Not in Chinese, not in Russian — in English. Fifty percent of those who were born and raised in America. Is that the level we want in our schools? That's exactly where everything is heading.

And why? Because it's easy to manipulate an uneducated person. You give him a piece of bread and he's happy. He doesn't need anything else. But when a person is educated and understands things, it's much harder to hang noodles on his ears.

8.19. QUESTION: What is your attitude toward idlers?

ANSWER: The very word idler already speaks for itself; the attitude is purely negative. It's a parasite, even if not a big one, but what difference does it make whether it's big or not? Idlers represent one of the most dangerous things there can be. A person must act, must do something. To put it briefly, my attitude is sharply negative, with all the consequences that follow from that.

8.20. QUESTION: There's a question about the church wedding ceremony in Christianity. How does the wedding ceremony affect those who are married this way?

ANSWER: The wedding ceremony is a magical ritual that binds one person to another. That is, just like spells, binding, sorceresses and the like — the church does the same thing, only during the wedding rite. They may not realize it, but it ties one person to another. Some are tightly bound, some not so much. But if a binding occurs, that doesn't necessarily mean... In any case, it creates a fairly serious blockage. So, to the person who wrote this note — think about that. I will remove the negative consequences that may be present.

8.21 Question: Apparitions of the Virgin Mary around the world. Could these actually be appearances of Russian goddesses like Lada, Mokosh, and so on?

Answer: The fact that someone or something appeared doesn't necessarily mean it was the Virgin Mary or anyone else in particular. Only those who were able to see, saw something. Those who've read about it, know. Other people who were present saw nothing at all. What is this connected with? It's simply that some people are sensitive to other levels of reality and can perceive those levels, and if some entity appears, they can see it. If a person was raised in the Christian faith and sees a female entity, they immediately declare they saw the Virgin Mary.

I'll give you an example - there is a place in France, a castle, where a pilgrimage recently began there. Why? Two local girls saw the Virgin Mary. But in reality, it was simply the essence of Svetlana coming out - they saw her. But since these children were raised with certain beliefs, they saw a female entity, who else would they recognize? The Virgin Mary. And the pilgrimage to that place and around that place began. This is how the church takes advantage of people's ignorance.

In my autobiography, Volume 1, I gave an example: once I met a woman in Kyiv who was shocked when she saw me. Later it turned out that she had experienced clinical death and was brought back into her body with the message: "This is not your time, go and heal people." She came back to life, she had taken poison, and everything broke down inside her, and after that she became a believer. Why was she in shock? Because when she saw me, she recognized the one who returned her to her body. She thought that the Lord God had brought her back. I told her, "No, I will disappoint you, I am not the Lord God or even an angel, I am just a man."

So, it's people's ignorance and lack of understanding about what's actually happening that leads to such absurd interpretations. If someone sees a female entity — it's immediately assumed to be the Virgin Mary. If someone is brought back to life and told "go," it's assumed to be God or an angel. The thing is, people are being kept from full understanding of reality. These are all real levels of the Earth.

8.22 Question: We spent many years in a religious cult. We left when we realized we were living in delusion and deceit. Please help us remove the blockage.

Answer: When the work is done at the end, those who wrote a note, just think to yourself that you want to be freed from the blockage, I'll try to help you. Of course, that doesn't mean everything will disappear immediately, because usually, when someone gets caught in the claws of those bastards, they start attacking and harassing them afterward. But in any case, if something heavy or difficult happens later, let me know through the website. If nothing serious happens, then that's wonderful. Unfortunately, such deception is common. It's good that these people were able to understand and free themselves, because many are brainwashed so thoroughly, they never escape.

8.23 Question: People are asking — how to quit smoking?

Answer: Again, I'll try. At the end of the lecture there will be a session - think about this as well. I hope it will help. For some, one time is enough; for others, it takes many sessions. It depends on the individual. Some people's systems are more dependent on it, others less so. So, we'll see. I hope it helps you quickly.

8.24 Question: What can you say about the definition of the EGO, about the nature of its essence?

Answer: Different people put different meanings into it, so depending on what a person means, it's hard to give a clear answer. In my understanding, ego is one thing, while for someone else it may be something entirely different.

If by ego one means a person's ambitions, selfishness, then its nature is largely ignorance and the desire for something unattainable. People are different — and that's actually a wonderful thing, in my view. If everyone were the same, life would be terribly boring.

What people suffer from is wanting something they simply can't have — but why? Wouldn't it be better for a person to direct their energy toward something they truly can do, want to do, and love doing — and in that, reach their highest possible level? That would be of real value. But if a person chases something they fundamentally can't attain — they'll destroy themselves and make others' lives miserable too.

Egoism, ego — unfortunately, it's all built around this: a person strives for something they can't reach and don't even have the capacity or talent for — or aren't willing to put in the effort. Sometimes a person has talent, but talent is truly 1% talent and 99% hard work. Even with talent, to achieve something, a person must work — not just think about it, but work hard like Papa Carlo. And even then, it doesn't guarantee success.

A person shouldn't do something just to be patted on the head, or to be told, "You're a great artist, poet, or writer." I believe that's not the reason one should do anything. A person should do it to feel inner joy. When you create something and you feel joy from it, when your soul sings — that is the most important thing. Whether someone thanks you for it or not doesn't matter at all, in my opinion.

So, if a person works this way — not overthinking, but simply doing what the soul tells them, what brings the soul joy — and doesn't worry about how others will react, whether they'll praise it or not, then that person will truly move forward. That's my view.

8.25 Question: What is ball lightning a manifestation of?

Answer: I haven't specifically studied ball lightning, but in any case, it's a manifestation of the Earth's electric field. Due to certain locations where space becomes distorted in a specific dimensionality, a closed volume forms — a standing wave. A standing wave is a concept unfamiliar to many today. It's when a specific volume of space gets charged with high potential, and as a result, ball lightning appears. It's unstable and can move because the conditions around it change. Depending on how those conditions change, it starts to move in one direction or another. That's the short version, because I haven't studied the topic in depth, but in any case, it is a natural phenomenon.

8.26 Question: What was the social structure of our ancestors during the time of the Arctic Empire — cities, villages, livestock, money?

Answer: I haven't yet investigated such details, so I can only speculate. I won't speak about things I'm not 100% certain of. But I can say the following:

In the early stages, I encountered many civilizations on other planets — and the concept of money didn't exist there. When we first interacted, I had to spend quite some time explaining what money even is, because they had no such concept.

As for our ancestors, they naturally had certain equivalents for labor, but exactly how that worked — I haven't yet determined. To give a concrete answer, one needs evidence. That's why I only speak about things I am completely convinced of and have solid proof for. It's an intriguing question, but I believe their social structure was quite fair.

I actually know more about what's happening on other planets than about what was happening on ours during that time. But the civilizations that do exist out there — they have a hierarchy. Democracy, in the way it exists here, in my opinion, is complete nonsense. What is democracy? Everyone makes a collective decision — but who is responsible? No one.

It was the same in Soviet times. I lived in the States for 15 years, so I've seen the world from both sides and have a complete picture. All of this is designed to deceive the people. When decisions are made collectively and no one is held accountable — what happens? Something gets ruined, and who takes responsibility? Did anyone ever answer for failed projects? No.

On other planets, such a thing doesn't exist. There, hierarchy exists. Each being occupies a place in the hierarchy according to their level of development. That doesn't mean it's permanent — if you evolve, you move forward, but it has to be real progress.

No bribes, no connections will help, like here, where you buy a position and suddenly become a minister. But your brain didn't get any better from that, you didn't acquire the level of understanding a minister should have, just because you pulled a few million dollars out of your pocket and handed it to the right person. That kind of thing simply doesn't and can't exist elsewhere. Every intelligent being holds their place in the hierarchy strictly according to their actual level of development.

If a being advances, not necessarily a human, but any intelligent being, then it occupies a higher position. But hierarchy there implies responsibility: if you hold a position, then you are fully accountable for everything that happens.

And if something goes wrong, they don't question the crowd, claiming "everyone decided," they go straight to the one responsible. And they punish to the fullest extent, so severely that it's no joke.

That's why I believe this is the right system: when the one who makes the decision must bear full responsibility for it, and for those who are hierarchically below them and under their charge. They are responsible with their own skin, not someone else's, up to full deconstruction to zero if the violations are serious.

Read more about this in Volume Two. I gave an example there, as described in [unspecified source], the hierarchs of Atlantis were punished. Four were completely destroyed, meaning, unraveled, because they misused their position. Another nine were seriously punished. Their rods were taken away. The rod of power, authority. They were stripped of power, meaning they were evolutionarily demoted. That was real punishment.

This, I believe, is a fair system. A social hierarchy must exist, without it, it's impossible. But every link in that hierarchy, a person, if we're speaking about Earth, must be accountable for what they are responsible for. If they have a zone of responsibility, they must be held to it fully. There may be objective factors beyond a person's control. If so, those must be taken into account and corrected. But if there are no such reasons... then it's done. And this, in my view, is the only proper way to operate.

8.27 Question: Regarding activity, that activity influences development.

Answer: Let me ask the audience, "Who here is doing work that brings joy to their soul?" There are some, but less than half. So, the majority of people, even those sitting here with us, are doing their jobs just to earn money, to feed their families, and so on. Naturally, such work doesn't bring much joy.

If a person has the opportunity to find work that brings joy to their soul, then it's highly recommended to do so. That's the first condition. The second is to find something interesting in the work you're already doing, to make it creative for yourself.

In my autobiography, I wrote about how, when I worked in a factory after school, I turned the most boring work into something that brought me joy. Not just the fact that you're doing something, but that you are doing it, overcoming yourself, that brings joy too.

For example, I had a job after school at a repair aircraft plant in Mineralnye Vody, where I lived. My job was to smash components to extract the gold contacts. They'd dump several hundred relays in front of you, and you'd take a hammer and break them apart to get 2–3 grams of gold, platinum, or silver from the contacts.

Creative work? Not exactly. But I made it creative for myself. I thought, how many relays can I smash in an hour, preferably without smashing my fingers? I smashed them, could I do ten more? This boring job became creative for me. I competed with myself and got joy from the fact that I could do it. I broke ten more, can I do even more? And so, by pushing myself, I turned tedious work into something that gave me satisfaction.

You can find creativity and interest for yourself in any kind of work. And there's a third option when that's simply not possible. For example, finding joy in working at a morgue and dissecting corpses. My imagination just isn't enough to see how one could find soul-level joy in that kind of work.

So, when the work is of that nature and nothing can be changed about it, a person must use their other time. In that other time, they can find something that truly speaks to their soul — and there, they can give their soul what it needs. Especially for those who work in morgues, I know they often develop a different kind of outlet: they start competing to see who can drink the most alcohol (spirit). They get quite good at that competition, though I wouldn't recommend it.

8.28 Question: People are asking about the fires in the Belgorod region and in the Altai region in September - are these all part of the same chain of events?

Answer: Yes, that's exactly what it is. Those fires in Altai and so on - they were mostly deliberate. Intentional arson.

8.29 Question: A question about the Non-Uniform Universe. What are the conditions for the emergence of intelligence?

Answer: In brief, I recommend reading Volume One of Essence and Mind. There I explain the necessary conditions both for the emergence of life and for the emergence of intelligent life. The presence of four material bodies is indeed essential for intelligent life to arise. Therefore, in universes that are structurally formed with fewer (material bodies), intelligent life cannot exist. Such universes do exist, but they are designed to address other kinds of situations.

Where life at the micro-level is not possible, intelligent life may emerge at the macro-level. That is, a universe itself can be intelligent. An entire universe can possess consciousness, but that's a separate topic, and I won't burden you with it now. For many, this might sound a bit vague. In any case, read Essence and Mind — it's explained there in more detail.

8.30 Question: In many fairy tales, there are examples of people turning into birds or animals. What is this connected to?

Answer: I haven't studied this question in detail, so I don't think I can give a complete answer right now. But what I can say quickly is that, most often, this was symbolic, most likely an image or metaphor. When people had the ability to teleport, they would pass that knowledge down in the form of certain symbols or imagery.

Although in some cases, there are stories of real phenomena, such as people turning into werewolves, but the werewolves that exist in reality are nothing good. Whereas in fairy tales, everything is portrayed positively. So, I believe the meaning behind these tales was quite different from literal transformation into animals. For example, transforming into a bird. It means a person could see from afar.

How can one see over long distances? To most people sitting here, if you say that a person was able to see something mentally from far away, telepathically, it sounds like nonsense (makes a circling gesture at the temple), right?

So, to understand how this is done, or what it really is, a person has to be prepared. I think that in fairy tales, many things were expressed symbolically. For instance, "flew like a bird" means rising up, gaining perspective, seeing what's happening, or "a person saw what was happening somewhere," and so, "flew there as a bird."

Secondly, it's quite possible that our ancestors possessed the ability to control the behavior of animals. Most likely, that would be the correct interpretation, meaning they could subordinate a particular animal to their consciousness, even perceive information through the animal's mind, through its eyes, and act through it. That's entirely possible, but it doesn't mean they physically transformed into a bird, or a bear, or a wolf, or a dog.

That's what I can say. That's what my analysis has shown. Most likely, it really is possible to subjugate an animal and control its behavior. And if such an animal is killed, the person controlling it could also die. This is true, because their consciousness enters into the animal, and the essence of the person controlling it is already within the animal's body. In this sense, such things are entirely possible.

8.31 Question: In China, stone armies were found: cavalry, replicas of human and animal figures.

Answer: A lot of things have been found in China. Many Chinese are still afraid to go beyond the Great Wall. It's quite possible that those who built the Great Wall of China were our ancestors. That they built the wall to keep the Chinese from encroaching on Russian lands. The fact that it's now considered to be in China is a mistake, a result of ignorance.

When Great Tartary was overtaken by Muscovite Tartary in 1775, to be precise, they didn't know the true borders of the state. And Muravyov-Amursky, I believe it was him, was sent by Catherine II to establish the border with China. He made a blunder, thinking he was doing the right thing. He was told that the supposed border between Russia and China should run along the ridge of the Stanovoy Range. But when he arrived, local Russian Cossacks began complaining that the Chinese were invading Russian lands.

He summoned the Chinese envoys and issued a formal protest. Seeing that the Chinese were frightened, he decided to bluff and proposed establishing the border along the Amur River, much farther south than the ridge. He was very surprised when the Chinese were absolutely delighted by this.

So, Muravyov-Amursky, who received his title from the Amur River, had no idea that he had given away the territory from the Amur River to the Great Wall for free. He thought he had taken territory from the Chinese up to the Amur, but in fact, he had given away the land from the Amur to the Great Wall.

Because the Great Wall was indeed not built by the Chinese, but by our ancestors, to separate themselves from the Chinese. And in fact, all the battlements (the arrow slits) face south, not north, which is quite telling. And most interestingly, the staircases to climb the wall are on the north side, not the south.

So, the question is: who was the wall protecting against? If the Chinese were defending themselves from the north, then everything should be the other way around — the battlements should face north, and the staircases to climb the wall should be on the south side. But in reality, the wall is twice as tall on the southern side as it is on the northern side.

Again, what does this tell us? Who was really defending against whom? So, Count Muravyov-Amursky, unknowingly, gave that territory to China. And now they are becoming outrageously bold, giving grants to our so-called "scholars," who then begin renaming things, replacing Russian names with Chinese ones.

Then the Chinese will come and claim, "These are our names, our lands. Give them back to us." That's how these "scholars," just to get a bit of money from the Chinese, are changing Russian place names to Chinese ones, which I consider completely unacceptable.

This is a deliberate and systematic preparation for territorial claims. Do you understand what that means? That later, once the entire Far East and all of Siberia are renamed with Chinese names, they'll declare that all of it is their land, "the names are Chinese." Don't the people taking these bribes realize what they're doing? That's on their conscience.

8.32 Question: Regarding the elections in Belarus.

Answer: I haven't really had time to follow what's going on in Belarus or what "Batka" [Lukashenko] is up to over there. As far as I remember, he used to do a lot of good things for the people, but recently, he has really deteriorated. So, I don't know whether he'll be elected again or not. Although, we all know how elections really work.

8.33 Question: Please help us understand, who was Jesus Christ? Elena Ivanovna Roerich saw the image of Jesus Christ in Shambhala and wrote that he was the Lord of Shambhala.

Answer: I won't presume to say what Elena Roerich saw or where she saw it. That's something she would have to explain herself. What is Shambhala? There is a Black Shambhala and a White Shambhala.

The White Shambhala is located in a completely different place than the one Elena Roerich refers to. It's also in the Himalayas, but on the territory of modern-day China, in a region called the Moon Hills.

The Black Shambhala, there have already been several TV programs about it, especially concerning Hitler. It was the Black Shambhala that supported him. The same goes for Lenin. He, too, was supported by the Black Shambhala. These are dark forces, they just happen to use the name "Shambhala."

Jesus Christ, in any case, why would he have anything to do with Shambhala, especially the Black Shambhala, considering he held a Vedic worldview and fought against religion? Even in the Gospels, he says: "Your father is Satan," meaning the devil. He told the Jews that their god, Yahweh Jehovah, was in fact the devil, Satan. What does that tell us? That he could not possibly have been his son or messenger. And it's no coincidence that he was crucified specifically as a false prophet. If you read the Torah, it clearly states: "Any prophet who speaks against me (as the Torah is from God) must be crucified as a false prophet, no matter what miracles he performs."

To truly understand who Jesus Christ was, I recommend reading the book Revelation by my wife, Svetlana. She describes all of this very clearly and with supporting evidence. There are many fascinating artifacts, she did an enormous amount of work. So read the book, especially the final chapters, where events related to Christ are described: who he really was, who Magdalene was, what was done to them, by whom, and why. I haven't read Elena Roerich, but what she says already tells me a lot. Namely, that she didn't understand what she was talking about.

By the way, do you know that the fascist swastika is actually the swastika of death, the arms turned in the opposite direction? There is a swastika of life and a swastika of death. Depending on which direction the arms are turned: in one direction, it is the swastika of life; in the other, the swastika of death. First of all, they were not "fascists." They were National Socialists, and they adopted the swastika of death as their symbol. Secondly, about the abbreviation "SS," which everyone knows, I had never heard an explanation for what it stood for. It was strange to me, until someone decoded it.

If translated into Russian, SS stands for “Soldiers of Socialism.” The Social Democratic Party of Germany, they were the soldiers of socialism, of German socialism. And that’s why, during the Soviet era, no one said anything about what the abbreviation “S.S.” really meant.

8.34 Question: I heard a law was passed regarding property tax. What will happen to us?

Answer: I haven’t heard that it’s been officially passed yet. It’s just that in some regions they’re already testing it in practice. I hope it doesn’t get passed, though they’re planning to adopt it either this year or next. Unfortunately, very few signatures have been gathered so far. It’s necessary to collect 100,000 signatures in order to present them in protest.

Right now, sadly, there are very few votes on the website. It would be laughable to go to them and try to present this as a protest against the law. I’m honestly surprised because this law will affect and essentially enslave almost every person. And yet people are so downtrodden, no one even asks them to fight for their neighbor’s rights.

If this law passes, it will affect you first and foremost. It’s like the saying, “your own shirt is closest to your body,” but it turns out even your own shirt isn’t so close anymore. (A voice from the audience: “They’re afraid.”) They’re afraid? And what then? Will they stop being afraid once they’ve been turned into slaves?

When they start coming to throw people out of their apartments, especially in Moscow and other cities where property prices are high, what will they say then? There are many Muscovites here today, you know that the minimum price for an apartment is half a million dollars. And the closer to the city center, the more expensive it gets.

Now calculate: if it’s 1% of the market value of the apartment - 1% of $500,000 is $5,000. That’s what you’ll be paying. Now convert that - 150,000 rubles. So, for an apartment worth half a million, you’ll be paying 150,000 rubles per year, just in taxes.

That means a person would need to earn at least 15,000 rubles per month just to pay the property tax on their apartment. How many people here in this room earn 15,000 rubles per month just for their apartment? Not many. It turns out that the overwhelming majority of people sitting in this room, if this tax is passed, simply won’t have enough money to pay the tax on their own homes.

In my opinion, there should be no property tax at all, fundamentally. If a person buys an apartment, they should pay at the time of purchase. I agree with that. The state should be a participant in the transaction and collect its share.

I believe the seller should pay no more than 15% in taxes. But the buyer shouldn’t pay anything. And once the property is purchased, it should belong to them permanently. Yes, a person should pay for services, for electricity, for gas, that’s a different matter.

But if you’ve bought an apartment, why should you have to pay tax on it? You earned the money, bought the apartment, it’s yours. You don’t owe anyone anything. Why should you keep paying for it? That’s private property. It’s theft and deception. I believe there should be absolutely no property tax, only a sales tax when the property is sold. Otherwise, it becomes slavery for people. And not just in Moscow, in many large cities in Russia, property prices are also high, but salaries are even lower than in Moscow.

I know that in Omsk, salaries are 3,000 to 4,000, maybe 5,000 rubles a month. And even if they don't have to pay 150,000 a year, if they need to pay 60,000 rubles in property tax, they won't have enough. Maybe they would, but only if they don't eat, don't drink, don't use electricity, and survive on the Holy Spirit alone. I don't know if the Holy Spirit will feed them - most likely not.

So, I don't understand - what are people so afraid of? That their lives will be taken away? It will be taken away anyway. What's left to lose? Everyone will end up on the streets, we'll all become homeless - and then what? I don't understand what there is to be afraid of, and how long people will keep being afraid. Then they complain, "Why is life so bad? Why is everyone walking all over us?"

We need to rise from our knees, to destroy the slave within ourselves first and foremost. As long as we don't do that, every scoundrel will continue to trample over us. I know they're trying to push through the juvenile justice law, but it's complete madness. Under it, everything is under total control. If they decide that children aren't living "well enough," where will they send them - to orphanages? To other parents?

And in Russia, will there be many people capable of raising other people's children, especially under such property tax conditions? If the property tax law is passed, how many people will be able to take care of someone else's children on top of everything else?

And selling... or even worse, do you know what's really behind it? I believe the real reason is to increase the number of abortions, because there's huge money in it. What Russia is trading, it's a medical mafia, I can't call it anything else. They are killing unborn children and extracting material from their spinal cords and brains, obtaining human beta-alpha protein. It's a type of protein, and in 1994–1995, it sold on the market for $8 to $10 million per gram. That's raw material. And back in 1994–1995, Russia was supplying the U.S. with 2–3 kilograms of this substance.

Just imagine - how many are needed? Around a million children, 5–6 months into pregnancy, have to be killed to extract it and earn billions. That's what it's really about. Of course, they're doing a lot under the surface, because Russia is, what, the most densely populated country in the world?

We have a lot of people living in this country and everything is being done to destroy that, to make sure there are even fewer. When the Duma is filled with people who are being paid off by the same mafia, the medical mafia, to push such laws. They couldn't care less about what the law actually does. All that matters to them is getting the appropriate bribe in their pocket. They get paid and they pass the law they were paid for. But if they were held personally responsible for every law they passed, I don't think we would be seeing laws like these at all.

8.35 Question: How dangerous is ultrasound (US) and how does it affect the baby and possibly the pregnant woman?

Answer: What is ultrasound? It's ultrasonic waves, longitudinal waves. To put it simply: ultrasound is used to break up kidney stones. And if the dosage is just slightly too high, it can damage the kidney itself. Do I need to comment further?

Yes, when ultrasound is used to monitor pregnancy, the intensity isn't as high as when breaking stones, but it is still a real physical impact on the cells of both the baby and the mother. I believe ultrasound should be used only when there is some uncertainty in the development of the fetus, for example, if the baby is in an abnormal position or there's some other issue. Only in such unclear situations should ultrasound be applied, and even then, very sparingly. But if the pregnancy is progressing normally, then in my opinion, ultrasound should not be done at all. That's my view.

8.36 Question: Is it possible to create an instant punishment system to speed up the liberation of Earth from the dark forces? For example, someone does something bad and immediately gets sick and dies?

Answer: Of course, that would seem ideal, but unfortunately, there are certain laws in place. When a person does harm, causes trouble, they punish themselves regardless, whether they realize it or not.

Punishment happens automatically. It is not that someone is punishing them. Rather, at the very moment of their action, changes occur within them, in their essence. This gets passed on to their children, and their children's children, and so on. Eventually, their essence ends up where it rightfully belongs.

Now, if we talk about just punishing everyone right away, sure, that might sound like the simplest solution. But who would decide who should be punished and who shouldn't? And for what exactly should someone be punished, and what should be allowed?

If we're speaking of that kind of punishment, it would have to be a magical punishment from a different level, so to speak. There are laws for this: magical retaliation is only allowed if someone attacks using magic. Then it is permitted to respond with magic. But if that's not the case, then it's not acceptable. You can block an action, but in order to do that, you have to determine which actions must be blocked. This whole situation exists because people are afraid.

Why does someone commit evil? Because the majority of people are afraid to speak up and say what they truly think. Of course, if someone has nothing good to say, then better to stay silent. But if a person does have something valuable to say, then they shouldn't be afraid to speak. People are afraid, "What if something happens? What if it backfires? What if I lose my job?" But when you lose your life, there'll be nothing left to lose, will there?

Many things happen precisely because people are afraid. And in this regard, the Church had a major influence, "Endure it, this is all God's punishment." And so, people endure what they absolutely shouldn't. One should always fight injustice and not be afraid that if you stick your neck out, someone might hit you over the head. Well so what, someone got hit? Does that mean no one else should speak up anymore? But what if everyone stood up and spoke out? Then they wouldn't be able to hit everyone.

Because everyone's afraid, those few who are brave enough to stand up are left alone to face the system, and they suffer. And the rest say, "Oh, I was smart for not sticking my neck out. If I had, I'd be in trouble too." But did it ever occur to them that if everyone had stood up, there wouldn't be any trouble, and the consequences would fall on the ones who are actually doing the harm? So yes, it's a nice idea, but everyone thinks: "Let someone else do the work, and we'll all benefit."

The most important thing is for people to wake up. Even if, hypothetically, and even practically, all the corrupt individuals were removed right now... what would happen next? Who would take their place? All those new people, the ones who were previously oppressed? Even members of the movement must first truly wake up, understand things deeply, and act in the right way. Social parasites cannot destroy members of the movement — they might want to, but wanting doesn't make it so.

But that's not the point. Once again, there are only about 1,000 people across all of Russia actively involved, though many more sympathize. An uprising? That's foolish. What we're trying to do together is a spiritual revolution. (A voice from the audience: "There's no leader.")

It's not a leader we need. What we need is for people to wake up. Without that, they won't understand anything, and then what's the point? Who will replace those parasites? People who don't understand, and they'll be the first to fall for a bribe. Will no one be found to offer one? Of course they will. Because once the situation arises, many people suddenly appear.

I don't particularly respect Gorky for many reasons, but he has a story where a former bakery worker becomes the new owner, and there couldn't have been a worse boss. Because when a slave in spirit becomes the master, he turns into a despot. That's well known — not just from Gorky.

First, people must rid themselves of the slavery within their own souls. Because without freeing the soul from slavery, nothing can be accomplished. If people remain slaves inside and are then given positions of power, they will behave, if not worse, then certainly no better than those who came before them. A slave in soul is already dead, no longer a living person. (A voice from the audience: "We're made into slaves already in school. You're trying to drive the slavery out of us, but in schools, they're raising children to be slaves.")

I agree with you. But the thing is, nothing can be changed instantly. You can't just wave a magic wand and suddenly everyone wakes up happy, content, and healthy. It doesn't work that way, especially when we're talking about a social organism. In order for schools to stop turning children into slaves, many other changes need to happen first. Those who teach children must no longer be slaves themselves. And for them to stop being slaves, they first need to realize that they are slaves.

Those who write the textbooks, they're writing them in a way that also turns children into slaves. The entire system needs to be changed, and this has to be done, otherwise we'll all perish. But this doesn't happen in a single day, no matter how much we wish it could. Do you think I wouldn't love to just snap my fingers and everything becomes wonderful, everyone's happy and fulfilled? But understand, there have been situations where those who were doing harm were removed... and others simply came in and did the exact same thing. The system will not change until the people themselves change. And in order for that to happen, I can tell you the following...

What brings me joy is that many people who read my books, and in particular, write to me say that they have finally found a sense of meaning in life, a deeper understanding. I consider that to be extremely important. And now there are millions of such people. They're all beginning to act, and they've already changed, at least a little. After reading the book, a person changes and begins to see the world with different eyes. That's the initial phase. Nothing ever comes ready-made.

As for the Bolshevik revolution, you know what it led to. Behind that revolution stood a powerful international financial mafia, which poured massive amounts of money into it and actively sabotaged the process. The entire world sabotaged Russia's efforts, trying to destroy it. And let's not pretend, very little has changed since 1917.

If you know what was supposed to happen in August 2010 in Russia, those who have read know, the West was already prepared for it. What does that tell you? That the Western world will never look at Russia as a peaceful neighbor it can coexist with. Their task is to destroy. Did you know there's a map circulating in Europe that shows Russia divided into zones of influence - Chinese, American, German, and French? If you didn't know, now you do. They were planning to implement those zones this summer, to move quickly and send in troops, divide up spheres of influence. And Russia would have ceased to exist. Russia doesn't attack anyone. It is always others who attack Russia.

Alexander III was right when he said that Russia has only two allies, its army and its navy. And now, both the army and the navy, Russia's last remaining allies, are being systematically destroyed. (A voice from the audience: "Who does Russia even bother?") Who? Everyone! All the parasitic systems that have been created in the world. They are bothered simply by the existence of Russia.

I happened to hear an unbelievable interpretation that was made in America regarding Edgar Cayce's prophecy. Edgar Cayce wasn't exactly a prophet. He would enter a trance state and see events of the future. He specifically said that starting in 2010, Russia would begin its rebirth. And that Russia would become a completely different country, rising to the first place in the world. The new era of humanity would begin in Russia, and that's not all he spoke of. He even gave specific numbers and dates.

Recently, someone told me about a conversation they had with a woman originally from Russia, but married to a wealthy American. She's not well known in Russia, but everyone knows her over there. They concluded: Russia will prosper because they're going to move here. And they said, "What do you think we rebuilt Moscow for? We rebuilt it for ourselves." That all those luxurious apartment buildings standing empty, don't say they're unoccupied for no reason. "We'll just destroy the Russians, and then we'll move in. And Russia will prosper." I swear, I've never seen bigger idiots.

Russia can only prosper when it truly remains Russia. If America comes here and the land is still called "Russia," that changes nothing. Just look at America now, it's "prospering" so much there's nowhere left to go. It is Russians and other indigenous peoples who have lived together on the territory of Russia. They are the ones who can create a new future.

But as you can see, they decided to outsmart the future by destroying Russia. That's why, in the summer of 2010, they planned an operation, those who've read know what I'm referring to, so I won't go into it here. It was published in a newspaper, and the full version of the interviews is also available on the website, where I talk about some of this. It was precisely for that summer that they planned it, and they were 100% certain it would go through.

The U.S. State Department had already prepared documents by August 7, detailing what was happening in Russia. The German embassy was preparing to leave the "doomed Russia." (A voice from the audience: "I went to Italy that year and rented a car. The person handling the rental asked me, 'What's going on in Russia? They say something terrible is planned.'" I was surprised — I didn't know anything about it. I said, 'No idea, we just had five days of heavy smoke, that's all. I'm standing right in front of you, renting a car.' He looked at me in surprise and just said, 'I see,' and that was it.")

You see, all across Europe and the West, they were already prepared for the idea that Russia was doomed and dying. That people were dead, that there was plague, cholera. The U.S. State Department had even prepared a document for its citizens stating that even after September 5, the issue of plague and radiation in Russia would remain unresolved. They even had a forecast: that after September 5, there would be plague and radiation.

Was there a single case of plague in Russia? No. But they were writing about it as if it were an established fact. So, believe me — this wasn't just casual speculation. They were preparing for something real. (A voice from the audience: "Why didn't it happen?") Read the article, and you'll understand everything.

(Unclear question from the audience... something about the monetary system.) You see, destroying the monetary system isn't the problem. Back in 1987, I realized for the first time that money is evil, in the full sense of the word. I even experimented a bit with the system. And what happened? That was the "Black Thursday" of December 1987. But I stopped right away. You know why? Because if you destroy the system without replacing it, the resulting chaos would be worse than the system itself.

First, something else must be created to take its place. And there's a whole team currently working on that very seriously. Much is already prepared, our people are working. And when the new system is ready, it will still be monetary at first, because switching directly from one system to something completely different isn't possible overnight. The parasites made sure everything is interconnected and tightly bound.

When our system is created, not the parasitic financial system, but one of our own, then the old system can be dismantled. That's not the problem, believe me. But for now, everything is still tightly entangled. It's like the Chapaev-style approach — charging in with a saber raised, slashing ahead. But before you go cutting off someone's head, you need to understand what's what. Otherwise, you might cut off the heads, and then what? Then nothing. What follows would be even greater chaos. That's why it has to be done wisely. You have to replace the system with something else first, otherwise the resulting chaos would be far worse than what we have now. Whether we like it or not — that's the reality.

8.37 Question: My bag with documents was stolen. Can you help influence the situation?

Answer: If the bag with the documents is returned, it will most likely be without the money. But usually, in such situations, when people focus their thoughts on it, the documents are often found. I hope that will help in this case as well. I hope they return it to you too. But still — this isn't magic, not a wave of a wand where the person suddenly appears with your bag. However, it's possible to assist and try to influence the situation. In any case, it's an unfortunate incident. Unfortunately, thieves have always existed — and still do.

8.38 Question: How does the evolutionary growth of the soul manifest on the physical level?

Answer: On the physical level, you won't see much. People don't grow wings or learn to fly like angels.

The only thing that may significantly change is a person's eyes. There's a reason people say, "the eyes are the mirror of the soul." When a person changes, their eyes change too; they become deeper, clearer.

And as for other physical manifestations - no hooves, no tails, no wings grow. (Someone might have thought that. I can sense certain thoughts.) But no — nothing like that grows. And yet, real change does happen. The face changes, the eyes change. Sometimes you can look at a person's face and make a judgment about their intellect, you understand what I mean, and that will also reflect the inner change.

But that's really the only physical manifestation of spirituality at that level. I haven't noticed anything else in terms of physical signs. Of course, if a person can perceive other levels of reality, on those higher levels you would see a lot, if the person is highly developed. Spiritual development doesn't manifest physically, but in a person's behavior - how they act, how they treat others. That is where it truly becomes visible.

8.39 Question: Could you please comment on the situation in the Gulf of Mexico — is it leaking or not?

Answer: It is leaking. If anyone's interested, check the website www.webarmy.ru. That site has a lot of materials in Russian specifically on this issue. There were five leaks, not just one. The information about oil leaking from a single well is only part of the story. In fact, there were five leaks, and not all of them were from the well - four of them weren't. They were related to fault lines, not the drilling site - that's the first thing.

Secondly, they installed a cap or plug, but it's still leaking. It didn't help much. And now the effects are starting to show - the Gulf Stream is changing, it's getting colder, and one of the reasons is exactly what's happening in the Gulf. And this situation is beneficial to certain groups, which is why they're acting the way they are, but they have no intention of actually fixing the problem. What they've done is outrageous. The methods they used caused more harm than the oil itself.

For example, the United States is already in the midst of a serious environmental catastrophe, the very one they were threatening with this past summer, planning to cause even more damage. There were already reports showing that mercury and arsenic rains were observed in the Great Lakes region, up north near the Canadian border.

Do you understand what mercury and arsenic rains mean? That's nothing good, and that's just the beginning. (A voice from the audience: "What does mercury have to do with it? Where would mercury come from, from the sky?")

It's not coming from above. Do you really think that when oil comes out, only oil comes out? A lot of substances are released together with the oil - a great many impurities too, believe me. (A voice from the audience: "So the Gulf Stream looping back on itself, and the oil staying in the Gulf of Mexico, that just happened on its own?") The oil isn't leaving the Gulf, but to some degree, that's how it should happen naturally. At the very least, those responsible should be held accountable, right?

But they don't want that. They caused all this damage, and they reached out to me through certain intermediaries, offering proposals to help solve the problem. I said: "Fine, make an official request, an official contract for the work to be done." And they replied, "You know, it would be awkward for our president to make a formal request. Because that would mean admitting weakness." But I ask, and by not asking, does that give him strength? I understand if he asked and lost power, but not asking doesn't mean he has it. Whether he asks or not - the situation doesn't change. The powerlessness of modern conventional technologies is already completely obvious. And they say, "You understand, it's uncomfortable." I say, I don't see anything uncomfortable about it.

There must be an official request, an official contract. I made my position clear: if no one officially reaches out, I won't do the work unofficially either. If you want the work done, you pay for it - because I'm not going to do it for free. We need funds to lift up Russia. With empty pockets, unfortunately, nothing can be accomplished.

I said, "Fine, but where's the guarantee that you won't later claim that your advanced science solved the problem on its own? That it was you who gave Levashov money — because he allegedly created the problem in the first place and then blackmailed you for payment like a terrorist, demanding money to remove it again? Where's the guarantee that you won't say you paid Levashov to destroy Russia? Or that Levashov is laundering money through drugs and weapons? If you give me official guarantees on all of that, then maybe there won't even be a need for anything else."

After that, the person who was acting as my intermediary, the one who kept in touch with me — they just arrested him, without explanation, and held him for a long time. And then I was presented with an ultimatum, "Either Mr. Levashov does what we tell him to do, or we'll throw your intermediary in prison forever." This was the action of official representatives, high-level intelligence services. So, tell me, who's the real blackmailer here? I had to activate my own channels, and thankfully, I was able to get the person released.

(A voice from the audience: "But will the Gulf Stream still flow toward Europe and warm us?") It didn't really warm us much, and Europe not that much either... Again, I received several inquiries from the UK, through various organizations. As far as I know, even their parliament discussed the issue. There were those in favor of asking for help and those who weren't. They eventually decided: "Let it cost trillions of dollars, but we will not ask Levashov for help."

So be it. We will protect Russia, and we are not obligated to protect other countries, right? Because who ever thought about protecting Russia? Who worried about Russia? No one. They've always spit on us so why should we now worry about them? If they want help, fine. But have they ever done anything for us for free? They robbed us left and right. Why should I do something for them just like that? Enough. Because when I did things for free, it helped no one. The parasites just profited even more from it. I think it's time they stopped getting rich off of us. We need those funds. Just imagine how much we need to build proper cities, enterprises, and infrastructure projects. That requires massive resources.

Because, for now, we can't just abandon the monetary system, as much as we might want to. It still has to function. People need to be paid. They have families to feed. That requires enormous finances. And where are we supposed to get that money? Will the parasites just come and say, "Here, take it, please?" The Stabilization Fund was moved abroad back in Yeltsin's era, and I believe that was a strategic mistake. Who keeps their wallet in the territory of a potential enemy?

If America attacks Russia, and that scenario is theoretically possible, then what, are we supposed to say, "Excuse me, can I have my wallet back, please? I don't have money to wage a war?" Will they give the wallet back? I don't understand how such a thing was ever allowed. It's clear who gave Yeltsin that advice. Who were his advisors? CIA agents. And they gave him the "appropriate" advice.

I was once interviewed for The New York Times, and they asked me: “What do you see as the main problem in Russia?” I said: “The problem with Russia is America.” What we’ve come to now is nothing less than the realization of brilliant economic plans, plans developed under the complete control of U.S. specialists. All these so-called reforms, who was overseeing them? The Americans. So, if America hadn’t been involved, maybe what we have today wouldn’t have happened at all.

8.40 Question: Why are you such an unhealthy person if you have such great abilities?

Answer: And who told you that I’m an unhealthy person? I have enough health for hundreds or even thousands of people. So, I clear my throat — so what? We came here for a meeting with readers of the books, and is there anything in those books that says I’m here to provide help? No. The fact that I offer help in addition to that doesn’t mean that those who came to this meeting should start demanding help from me. So, let’s settle this once and for all — regarding health or “unhealth.”

No other person could withstand even a single minute of the kind of work I’ve been doing nonstop every year for 20 years. And as for the strength of my muscles — I can easily compete with younger people. As a kid, I could swing a pood-weight (16 kg) with ease, and I can still do it now — and more.

So, when I have to work 20–25 hours a day (and I say 25 on purpose, because even when I’m resting, I’m not actually resting), yes, there is a certain level of fatigue. But from this kind of fatigue — if others had to endure it — I don’t think they could... One person I once taught a little something to tried to dissolve a kidney stone for just five minutes. He failed — and then slept for 30 hours straight, completely unconscious.

Many of the things that happen require a tremendous level of energy, not just the kind needed to dissolve a kidney stone in a few seconds without any issues. And if you consider some of the things I’ve done — the events I’ve described in my articles — do you really think people thank me for that? Or thank my wife, for example?

No — they try to destroy us by any means possible, because we’re like a bone in their throat, something they can’t ignore. There have been numerous attempts to eliminate us on various levels. In the past, those attempts were primitive. They realized long ago that planting a bomb, firing a bullet, or using a poisoned needle are just small-time tactics. So now, they’ve switched to something else. They run a continuous program of destruction, and I have to absorb and neutralize it all.

As for the extra weight — if you sat at a computer 15 hours a day, working every day, you'd understand. I probably eat less than most people in this room. And then there's genetics — there's a natural phenomenon encoded in us: as a person ages, they lose mobility. That’s obvious, no need to explain it.

Nature has also encoded a protective mechanism — as mobility decreases, the body builds a fat cushion to protect the internal organs. Yes, I have that fat layer, and believe me — it bothers me a lot, and I would love to get rid of it. But spending time on that — I have no desire to waste energy on such nonsense. Whether I lose that weight or not won’t help me solve my actual problems. To solve those, I need this (slaps forehead) — and as long as this works well, and I can handle the loads — which are, believe me, enormous — then that’s what matters. I have enough health for thousands of people.
