

Salvation of the Saviors (series 43-369)

Understand and realize...

*Everything may be, and everything can be,
but one thing cannot be: that which can no longer exist, although ...

For more than thirty years, we have been creating certain societies, guided by certain ideas that have caused us more and more astonishment over the years. But no one is taking them off the agenda. The idea of rebuilding the world seems like an empty fantasy to most people, not because they find the goal unworthy or see logical fallacies, but because the scale is confusing. An ant, for example, will only take things seriously within the confines of his anthill. The thought of activity outside of his home would never occur to him. In the same way, people assess what is happening today from the point of view of domestic, commercial... at most, political benefits (which is the same as commerce). A person does not think beyond the usual scale. Even if, on the whole, he agrees with the arguments presented, he will not be able to take what is happening seriously. To dream and talk is fine. But in order to look at what is happening around him as real, the implementation of which needs to be started by him and right now - sorry. Because it is too much beyond the usual horizon. So much so that the thought does not go in that direction. The roots of such behavior are in the instinct of self-preservation. Those who were not afraid of the unknown and the incomprehensible were filtered out by the so-called evolution, or, to be more precise, the program for creating Brain genotypes. That's why people shy away from everything new. They want to look at it from the outside first, make sure it's not dangerous. And if they see that it is also useful, they go there in droves. Until they're sure, they're watching. From around the corner. They're cautious. Trying things out. And life and chances go away... "And I see that people don't live, but everyone tries on, tries on and puts their whole life on it. And when they have robbed themselves and wasted their time, they begin to cry fate. What is fate here? Every man is his own fate! I see all kinds of people, but no one is strong! Where are they?"[\[1\]](#).

We were all born and raised in a consumer society, a society created against our will. The idea of the omnipotence of money permeated us to the core. We all know household wisdom in the style of: "Money solves everything", "What cannot be solved with money can be solved with a lot of money", "happiness is not in money, but in its quantity" and so on. In the early nineties, and even later, many so-called "politicians" said that "everything is bad for us. But when the "dormant forces of the market" start working, everything will change immediately, we will be saved, we will have wonderful dynamics and everything else." At the same time, there was not a single specialist who believed that, for example, the market could carry out structural modernization, that the market was generally self-sufficient.

The minds of our intelligentsia, which was just beginning to live at the expense of thoughts and ideas brought from outside in all areas of life and, of course, money, invented such a phrase as "command-administrative system", which ruled earlier. That's bad when it's command-administrative, but when it's market-based, it's good. And the command-administrative one will definitely lead to a dead end. I will say it more clearly — Your brain and central nervous system are a command-administrative system, and when you think that your finger should bend, it bends. This is a command-administrative action of the central nervous system within the framework of solving a problem defined by your brain (read - the head of the control structure). But there are some vegetative processes^[2]. Yes, indeed, I cannot (I am not a yogi) control them with my mind. Therefore, they are managed spontaneously, and no one wants all processes to remain only command-administrative. A huge part of life really should be carried out on the basis of this very vegetative system, which has its own rights. Sometimes, when the mind is "very stupid", it "turns it off" and works itself, we also know about it. And both systems somehow coexist... What does it mean to put this command-administrative system into oblivion all together? This means freeing all centralization and all volitional, teleological and other "impulses" from the need to take responsibility for what is happening. They are illuminated, they are no longer there. And what is this strange society in which they do not exist? Don't they exist in American society or in some other society, too? Here it is appropriate to quote the notorious A. B. Chubais, through whom, within the framework of the old system, significant stages were implemented in the very construction of what should have been "built", but in reality, did not take place. At that time, he said bluntly: "... When I looked at our scientifically and technologically advanced intelligentsia, who hugged us all the time, who supported us, I kept looking and thinking: my God, but we will have to destroy you in order to have new social relations - capitalism and the market and everything else. We don't need you, but you support us so much... How sorry I am for you..."[3]. And it almost happened! How many of the most modern and advanced scientific and technical means were destroyed during the last 30 years. And what other country in the world, when creating a new social order, destroyed its most advanced productive forces? At that time, we embarked on some strange path, which was characterized by several constants that had exactly the character of faith - faith and absurdity. But the main conclusion to be drawn (it became clear only now, precisely in today's time) is that one of these constants was as follows: as long as we are a Communist country, we have enemies who do not want us to be. They hated our ideology and so on and so forth. As soon as we become the same country as everyone else, they will stop hating us, everyone will love us. This was "hammered" into us in all possible ways, by the media and ideology. It was driven in within the framework of the already residual automotency of the program state of performers of the 42 and 44 Brain genotypes, as their vital functional performing vocation, endowed with them from the outside by the old control system. Suppose we became like everyone else. But the more Russia looks like everyone else, the more it will be hated. Paradoxically, but today we see that this is exactly the case. Because such things are the changes that our world is currently subject to due to those global processes that no one can change.

If you carefully look at the huge number of speeches, statements and arguments of representatives of various departments about the most pressing and most monstrous of our problems and everything related to the conduct of Special Military Operations, it is impossible to resist the strange feeling that many people have already had. For the success of a special military operation in Ukraine, we must first (or at least along the way), as a necessary prerequisite, conduct its analogue in relation to many structures (I will say politically correct) of the Russian state administration. It became obvious that liberalism is serving the interests of financial speculators against their people. Liberals, liberalism is today's embodiment of fascism, the embodiment of fascism of the information age. Anyone who doubts this can watch numerous speeches (and not only by Russian liberals) who support the fascists with one voice. In particular, fascists in Ukraine, the finished Bandera. These so-called liberals are supported in their actions by individuals with a pronounced 4xx Brain genotype, even if within the framework of their automotency, but this is how it is publicly expressed. The main thing is to clear our own Russian state administration of liberals, i.e., obvious and potential accomplices of fascism, by starting this "process" at least by teaching Russian officials to use their native Russian so that their answers are understandable to an ordinary normal person without "translators". Russian "translations" are not being carried out from the bureaucratic language into the Russian literary language, but from the bureaucratic language into the obscene Russian. Although I should note that in the essence of most of these answers, translations into obscene Russian correspond more than to literary Russian.

It's very hard for people today - no matter what anyone says. And to tell them in this worldly situation that everything that is happening is not a decision made by one (albeit collegially) person, but the development of the situation in what has been happening since the age of 23-24 — through him (through them) with a completely different plan that is beyond the competence of their understanding — of course it is necessary. But all this comes up against, first of all, current and sudden problems solved by people, for example, with the announced partial mobilization (both for the mobilized, and for the parents and relatives of these mobilized). In the process of this action, a lot of questions were exposed, ranging from "... why, for what and for whom ..." to finding a way out of this situation, as they say, by all "improvised" means up to escape (in any form) from the country. These are the realities of today. The realities to which there are still no clear and intelligible answers from those who consider themselves "rulers" and ruling for the good. No, because over the past at least a hundred years, as part of the implementation of the final period of the old system, even with the processes of implementing a new control system (which began only in 2012 in intensive use), we have become so saturated with untruth that if we look at our current world, most people are completely objective and openly say - "... after all, it's all lies, all without exception! ..." This is a very important moment! Many do not even imagine the scale of this voluntary or involuntary "lying" to themselves, to each other, to everyone around.

From everyday minor misunderstandings to the picture of the world order and understanding of the world, the meaning of life of all living things — from microscopic creatures to man on earth, and from him further and higher, to other perfect creatures. In addition to conscious lies (when they lie for selfish purposes or to manipulate the minds of others), there are still many unconscious, involuntary lies — lies from ignorance, lack of information or distortion of information, even when they spread INCOMPLETE OR UNVERIFIED information under the guise of informing. Such unconscious "lies" eventually (under whatever pretext it was done, from supposedly scientific "theories" to the interpretation and understanding of simple words) for many became the "breeding ground" of their life reasoning and their own understanding of what is happening. This is the basis for constructing an incomplete picture of the world, in which many gaps are simply drawn (as an assumption that this may be so), i.e., a subjective opinion with a very, very limited outlook. It has even become the order of things — it is fashionable to draw pictures of the world from the point of view of each of the numerous sciences, perceived as the "truth" in the last instance. And here, even if you are very clever, it is difficult to avoid mistakes and shortcomings (this is in your own defense), which, in fact, is observed among the "ruling elite" today. This is the formalized Western approach that was imposed on us. The trouble is when such (let's use a milder word instead of "lies") "insufficiency" is not realized and is cut off from the shoulder, speaking categorically and making it worse first of all to yourself, because there is responsibility for everything, from which there is no escape. In such conditions, it is wiser not to rush (as the proverb says — "if you hurry, you will make people laugh"). It is wiser to beware of erroneous conclusions, decisions and actions. You can follow another good proverb again: "measure seven times, cut once", acting carefully, prudently. And not the other way around: first, on emotions, cut and cut, shred; and then only try to start thinking on a pile of scraps (if there is such an ability at all — to think, more often they take something else for it). And what about the result now, how do you sort out the resulting mess of consequences? Everyone knows that circles diverge far from a thrown stone. So, one has to eat and eat, as many problems as he has "cooked" for himself. Or, when there is no ability to think at all (it happens that way), some people disperse emotions even further and destroy everything around them, including themselves.

Tragedies large and small are countless today all over the planet. Tornadoes in America, floods in Brazil, an earthquake in Turkey, Special Military Operations in Russia and Ukraine, and so on, etc. But most, unfortunately, do not understand that there are no mistakes in the sequence of what is happening today. The events that invade our lives, no matter how unpleasant they may be for us, are necessary for us to understand them and learn what we need to understand and what we need to learn. This is our chance, and there will be no other. But everyone still wants a lot at once. However, to repeat and reiterate, I say this is the sequence that is being strictly followed today. First the phenomenon, then the action, which together generate the event. The opposite does not happen. Not just somewhere in our collective, not just on Earth... In general, in the universe.

For those who are beginning to understand and strive for Knowledge, this is Program information, a hint on how to proceed. How and what to do next, how to act in detail, having successfully fulfilled what has been revealed to you. It's simple and it won't be any other way. Each event determines, as it were, a kind of "platform" for the next stage. Based on this, the law of causation should be explained exactly this way, and not as we were taught at school. This is a very important law, in which, by the way, there is an element of the law of logic — it speaks about the primacy of the phenomenon, subsequent actions and the event being accomplished. From this angle, in the totality of the above, look broadly at why in today's time, in Russia, it is not customary to say compliments, it is not customary to praise each other. It is not customary to say good things. On the contrary, it is customary to criticize and speak bad, offensively insulting things, presenting it under the guise of pure truth, they say, bitter truth is better than pure lies.

We have such an inability to praise, even though it is very easy, that sometimes you get the feeling that where you have to say something nice, people go numb in this situation and not just go numb, their facial muscles freeze up. They are not even able to smile. I emphasize - pleasant is not necessarily false. Flattery can be false, and compliments, something good — they are true. They must be based on some element of truth or non-truth, the real state of things, the real perception of a person. I think that you have noticed more than once that it is not customary to smile in our society, and those who smile (as they say, without reason) cause — alertness and suspicion. Let's ask ourselves the question: why are we so arranged, why can't we, often physiologically, say compliments and forget how to smile? Usually this is explained by culture, upbringing, social norms of some kind. This is true, but only partially true. Indeed, within the framework of the processes of the Old control system that took place, and BEYOND OUR UNDERSTANDING, and beyond the understanding of our educators, we were brought up, and still continue to be brought up in rudeness, in an atmosphere of suspicion and prodding, starting from kindergarten. It is not customary for us to praise; it is not customary to encourage verbally. It is customary for us to criticize, urge, poke and hurt. And boasting is extremely rare. Moreover, this style is very often, not always, but very often adopted in families too. It is tacitly assumed, it is precisely tacitly assumed, that if a person (son or daughter) behaves well, then what is there to praise about? This is the norm... I'll note here that it's the same at school. This is very noticeable at school. But if you make a mistake in something, something goes wrong with you, even if it's a trifle, then they will start criticizing you, they will start pushing you, they will start putting you up front. The size of this criticism is often not proportional to the size of your act, or, more precisely, the offense, the size of your omission. And they explain it all by your own interests. You are told: "... well, the fact that we are criticizing you now, the fact that we are pushing you, is all for your sake, dear, dear...". And they "saw" these unfortunate children are like a two-handed saw. And this little man does not need criticism, does not need prodding, he needs affection, warmth, kindness, our kindness. He needs encouragement. This is what adults need, we all need these "strokes". But children need it much more, because it is at this time, when they are very young, that they learn a style of behavior. And they become what we then see them as. And how do we see them, how do they grow up? They grow up if we don't praise them, if we don't encourage them (even if we assume that one attitude to children at home is a good positive one, but at school it is very often different), sullen, suspicious, always waiting for verbal slaps in the face. This verbal slap in our face is considered criticism for the sake of him, the child. We tell him the truth, not realizing that we successfully discourage children from being happy. So, it is no wonder that we so rarely see smiles in our society and that we do not know how to rejoice - we do not know how to rejoice in little things and do not want to rejoice in the successes of others. Unless we take some kind of "stimulants" artificial (mostly found today in the fields of the Internet) or natural "stimulants" (guess for yourself here) that allow us to "rejoice".

The paradox of the situation lies in the fact that the more we criticize, the more we "press", the more people ossify in their behavior, which seems unforgivable to us, seems like an omission, seems like a mistake. Not only children, adults also instinctively resist this, although outwardly they may agree with our criticism, but they "harden" in what we criticize. Because they consider it part of their identity - first. Secondly, who likes it if they put pressure on him, and they put pressure on him constantly and put pressure on him without any, from his point of view, grounds? At the same time, we are talking about criticism not only of children, we are talking about criticism of ourselves.

Often, although, of course, not always, we take our grievances and worries out on the children and on each other. We take out our own problems and complexes on children, because children are unrequited. What are we putting out? There are two very strong motivations. Moreover, it is very important that these motives are without conscious, that is, they move our words, move our vision, but we are not fully aware of it. At one time, I also had to make some effort to realize this and better understand my own behavior and my own motives. So, one of the strongest motives driving people is the instinct of power and the desire for revenge. This explains much better than education the nature of our dislike, the Russian dislike of compliments and at the same time our painful craving for hypercriticism^[4] on the verge of insult. We don't just criticize, but very often TRY to offend other people. This is inherent in people, and this is a clear confirmation of the development of people precisely within the framework of the programs of the Old Control System to create specific Brain genotypes. In order for us to move forward in our awareness of what is happening today, we must understand this. To understand — what does the concealment of motives mean or unconsciousness of motives. We always explain our behavior to ourselves in a flattering way, because you and I cannot be bad. Other people may be bad, or some bad circumstances that forced us to do wrong. You and I consider ourselves worthy people, so if we criticize someone, we are trying to make that person better. And in order to make them better, we tell them the bitter truth or criticize them day in and day out. Day after day we hit on one point, assuming it will help the person.

What really drives this criticism? This criticism is very often driven not by a desire to help a person, but by the unconscious and unrealizable desire to hurt a person. Pay attention to how we criticize, look at how people criticize each other. They seek not to HELP make a person better. They strive and are driven by the desire to prick him, to make him as bad as possible, to insult him. This is a very strong subconscious desire. Do not think that they are taking revenge on people, taking revenge on those they criticize, those they speak ill of. No! They take revenge on other people who have offended them. They take out on those on whom they can take out their irritation, their bile, their desire for revenge. This is what has been laid down in people since childhood as a specific, purposeful process to achieve a specific goal within the framework of the development of Brain genotypes. It was in this way, independently of people, that a certain destructive effect was carried out by an invisible state of parasitism, manifested by its effectiveness in cruel informational, social and material infringement. Now we observe everywhere the so-called automotive residual manifestations of all this.

Pay attention to how the model of criticism in Russia is built. This is very noticeable in social networks, where there are practically no conventions, and there are no checks. It usually begins like this — "... you, venerable one, do not understand anything about this issue ...". Of course, I exaggerate, usually the appeal is ruder or immediately becomes personal — "... how can this ... understand geopolitics" or "what does he understand in our life", or they immediately begin with the phrase — "how you hate Russia!"

This is what people consider fair criticism and are sure that they are telling the bitter truth. There is only one piece of advice here — if they try to have a conversation with you in such a manner (there is no need to listen to the lectures of teachers or anyone else), immediately curtail this conversation, because this is not criticism, this is an insult. Under the guise of criticism, people, I repeat, are trying to insult us, because they take out on us their desire for revenge, resentment that someone offended them in turn. And nothing more. Simultaneously with revenge, hypercriticism expresses the instinct of power, because when we criticize someone, we thereby show our own superiority, intellectual superiority, moral superiority. Why are people so fond of gossiping about each other? To show their own moral superiority - "...ah, look at what's going on in this family, what this comrade meant when he said... etc., but we're not like that..." All this needs to be "corrected" in people's minds, but only through their awareness, which today is incredibly difficult, but still possible. Through clarifications and explanations, even if many of your explanations will not be perceived.

Note, for comparison, how the model of criticism is built in Anglo-Saxon (far from being a supporter of the Anglo-Saxons) countries. There they will tell you, even if they catastrophically (not categorically, but catastrophically) disagree with you, something good, they will note interesting and truthful exact elements of your position - they will start with this. At least they can say that "you were sincere, you were frank, thank you for your frankness, this is a very interesting point of view, a very interesting position..." and only then they will move on to something else. That is, first they will actually give you a compliment, first they will praise you. Almost any person has something to praise. You just need to look at this person with an open mind. I have repeatedly been convinced of this myself, having been in these countries.

Our misfortune today, the misfortune of Russia, acquired over the past at least two thousand years (if you want, not a misfortune, but a congenital or acquired defect), is that the evidence of one's own merits is based on the humiliation of other people. We are good not because we are good, but because there are bad people nearby. They behave immorally, they are greedy, they are poorly dressed, they wear glasses, they are bald and so on, so on, so on. In PR, this is called "background creation". We create for ourselves (this is the most common strategy in Russia today) a negative background in order to look better against this background. Or, as they say more simply, "... everything is in the shit, I'm the only one in a white coat, I'm the only D'Artagnan." Many, probably, have met with this more than once, perhaps they themselves resorted to such a strategy of self-affirmation, demonstration of superiority, demonstration of power. Ignorance is strong because there is no doubt about it. It doesn't know anything, but it thinks it knows everything.

I hope now you understand why we are so afraid to praise others and why we love to criticize others so much. And not just to criticize, but to criticize in an offensive manner. And we consider this manner to be a message of truth. This is the explanation for our stiffness, the explanation for our lack of a smile.

After all, we are constantly waiting for a trick when someone smiles at us, especially spontaneously and involuntarily. We think what is it, what is behind it, is something wrong with me? Undoubtedly, something like this needs to be changed, changed meaningfully, certainly and as quickly as possible. Is there an alternative to this? Of course! You try to speak well of a person, speak about his merits, about his skills — and the main thing will begin to happen — you will begin to join his virtues. This, strange as it may seem, is a more successful strategy today than the strategy of highlighting against a negative background. If the people you communicate with are worthy of respect, worthy of encouragement, worthy of your compliments, you are probably worth something, aren't you? Think about it. By speaking positively about a person, you increase your own assessment in the eyes of not only yourself, but also other people. This is the beginning of the transformation of all of us to solve more global problems, which are becoming more and more apparent every day for our comprehension.

Let's ask ourselves a natural question and, as they say, it's best to start with yourself and do it simply: in the evening, remember — did you say something pleasant and truthful to anyone today? Believe me, if you start giving out positive words, compliments, then, most likely, you will be answered, reciprocated. Not everyone will. You should not hope that everyone will answer, but most likely you will get something in return. What you get will be pleasant to you. Remember Bulat Okudzhava — "let's say compliments to each other, because these are all short moments of love ...". It is not just love that is short, our life is short. We must always remember this. Who needs this insulting truth that we exchange with each other so easily? It is offensive and, perhaps, it is not even true at all. Our life, unfortunately, is fleeting, we should not turn it into hell with our "fair" criticism. No one needs this far-fetched justice. People need love, especially children. We need understanding, and any understanding that will be expressed in something, first of all, at least in words, our gestures and in our actions. This is what people need, and especially today, in our Fatherland.

Help those people who defend common sense, human dignity and moral values in Russia. Help as much as you can — with a kind word, a new word that many still do not understand, with stories about your participation in something that can attract attention to your activities both in reality and on the Internet - with likes and reposts.

Someone has to say a new word, it's very difficult to do. It was impossible, by renouncing some particulars of certain doctrines, to lose one's birthright, which lies in the right, the unique right to a new word - alternative historicity. Not iztorii, namely historicity. Now this right must be painfully restored in words, thoughts, education of generations and in concrete actions of today. And when this right is restored, then many other things will be restored. And we need to start with our ability to communicate and carry information to people. People who, of course, do not understand the entire basic part of the currently embodied creative process of the ongoing evolutionary changes and reduce what is happening in their perception only to limited initiative actions within the framework of Russia's "Special Military Operation" being carried out today. As if carried out, according to the Anglo-American-European lie, for militaristic purposes, "manifestations of hegemony over innocent and defenseless Europe, demonstrating its greedy aggressiveness so far only on the territory of Ukraine." This is exactly how this false slander sounds from all the means of the criminal mass media system for residents of Europe, England and America, finding echoes, of course, in Russia. But all the circumstances that are developing today are already correcting these insignificant (no matter how anyone raises their importance) temporary deviations in the formation of public consciousness of all people, not only in Russia, but throughout the world. And any level of the current theatrical organized lies will not help, because it is temporary and does not have, in our current understanding, the truth for everything that is happening.

People in Russia and all over the world are waking up and freeing themselves from the shroud and fog of lies, previously planted by the parasitic violence of an insignificant Anglo-American-European minority over the overwhelming majority of people all over the planet. It is necessary to inform people that this year and most likely the next one will be loaded with a huge number of newly introduced program elements in the management structure of the complex existence of the planet and especially the reconstruction of the true state of the Earth's energy balance. The magnetic field of the planet will have a significantly larger mass and its density will be unevenly increased, orienting its value to the already prepared modified picture of the functional and territorial new allotment of geo-administrative entities (including at state levels of scale). The conditions of controlled habitation on our planet are already being seriously adjusted towards the true program state. Some of the physical parameters in the atmospheric layers will change significantly (especially in layer No. 3 from 0 meters to 1,240 meters) and much more.

The general sociogenic^[5] picture of society (the picture of cohabitation of people with different Brain genotypes and subgenotypes) of the whole planet is already undergoing significant changes. The starting element of this most difficult episode is the beginning process of the final destruction of all three "Civilizational Ways of Life" previously created by the Ebrov System. Especially the American image (triune fascism), which was fully manifested in Russia through the dominant Brain genotype of specific performers within the framework of the so-called "democratic transformations". The entire Anglo-American-European platform will not be "released" from all the circumstances of the execution of program actions being implemented today by "Ukraine", until the episode of the elimination of the American triune fascism is basically completed. That is why all those secretly involved "ran" in panic, but it will not help them. Through the people of Russia, a new system of statehood will be created, the beginning of which has already been laid, and Russia will defend its own leadership function, since it has already led the rest of the peoples of the World by a different path of Civilizational development. It is against this background that the most global idea is born — To Defeat Death, as an idea that accommodates everything that is written above. However, the implementation of all this will be people, it will be you and me, those who have begun to understand what is happening today from a completely different angle, from what is presented to us. With those who defend common sense, human dignity and moral values, who began to tell people pleasant things and the truth, made meaningful by themselves, within the framework of their own knowledge, realizing that you will never change anything if you struggle with the existing reality. If you want to change something, create a new model so that the old one is simply outdated...

Take care of each other, and know - most importantly, firmly know and do not doubt, no matter how hard it is now, Victory will be ours, it will certainly be ours.
